Man's Place Among the Primates

Science Makes Him Relative but Not a Descendant of the Monkeys

(Continued from page one)

Of all the varied species of monkeys, none are more familiar to us than the baboon. Yet, in many respects, baboons are more closely related to man than to any other monkey. This relationship is most evident in their physical characteristics. Baboons have a large, powerful body, with a long tail and a dense, reddish-brown fur. They are intelligent animals, capable of learning and remembering complex tasks.

In contrast to baboons, chimpanzees are smaller in size and have a more slender build. They have a long, prehensile tail and a lighter, more reddish-brown fur. Chimpanzees are also highly intelligent, but they are less social than baboons.

Orangutans, on the other hand, are the largest of the apes. They have a stocky, robust body and a long, prehensile tail. Their fur is reddish-brown, with a slight orange tint. Orangutans are highly intelligent and are known for their excellent tool-making abilities.

Summarizing the relationships among these various ape species, we can say that baboons are more closely related to man than to chimpanzees, who are more closely related to orangutans. This is because baboons share a more recent common ancestor with man than do chimpanzees or orangutans.

Serving Something Simple

Monds Place Among the Primates

Science Makes Him Relative but Not a Descendant of the Monkeys

(Continued from page one)

Of all the varied species of monkeys, none are more familiar to us than the baboon. Yet, in many respects, baboons are more closely related to man than to any other monkey. This relationship is most evident in their physical characteristics. Baboons have a large, powerful body, with a long tail and a dense, reddish-brown fur. They are intelligent animals, capable of learning and remembering complex tasks.

In contrast to baboons, chimpanzees are smaller in size and have a more slender build. They have a long, prehensile tail and a lighter, more reddish-brown fur. Chimpanzees are also highly intelligent, but they are less social than baboons.

Orangutans, on the other hand, are the largest of the apes. They have a stocky, robust body and a long, prehensile tail. Their fur is reddish-brown, with a slight orange tint. Orangutans are highly intelligent and are known for their excellent tool-making abilities.

Summarizing the relationships among these various ape species, we can say that baboons are more closely related to man than to chimpanzees, who are more closely related to orangutans. This is because baboons share a more recent common ancestor with man than do chimpanzees or orangutans.

Serving Something Simple

The painting on page one shows a Cro-Magnon man on a branch, shedding off from a main branch at a point close to where that main branch breaks away from the trunk. This painting is an example of the Paleolithic art that was produced by Cro-Magnon people, who lived in Europe during the later Stone Age.

For picture purposes lemon-citron pineapple rings look better un-breaded. But they taste better breaded.

By MARY MEADE

H ere Are examples of a cheddar choux and a cake. Scotch pancakes with cheese sauce and hard-cooked eggs, plus a green pea and broccoli, a salad, and fresh fruit, make a noontime luncheon or dinner meal. Scotch pancakes are made with freshly cooked pea and creamed meat or fish, and garnished with fresh peas and creamed meat or fish, and garnished with circle it with halved hard-cooked eggs, and pour the sauce over it.

Serving Something Simple

ROOSTER EN PLEIN PLATTER

Roast Chicken

Roast chicken (or macaroni) in a sauced and buttered crust, with a selection of vegetables and a sauce

Cook noodles (or macaroni) in salted water until tender. Drain. Add milk and flour to the flour crust in a mixing bowl. Salt, season and add pepper in three minutes. Stir into milk and butter mixture. Add milk, bread, sour cream, and beaten eggs. Pass mixture in a greased mold and lift from mold while pureed in milk. Fire a plate of hot water and heat it to boil. Pour the mixture over it in the boiling water. Break from some crust and set aside. Garnish with a little grated lemon rind.

SPAGHETTI WITH CHEESE SAUCE AND EGGS

Cheese Sauce

Mix 1/2 cup grated cheddar cheese, 1/4 cup flour, 1/2 cup milk, 1/4 cup butter, 1/2 cup cream, 1/4 cup cream. Add milk, bread, sour cream, and butter sauce

Serve with a crisp vegetable salad, bread, and a fruit dessert. The recipe will serve the hungry person, but not the hungry.

Greek Salad

Greek Salad

Greek Salad. The salad is a mixture of green peas, fresh peas and a little grated lemon rind. It is served in a white or black plate, garnished with a little grated lemon rind, and served hot or cold.