The Inside Story of the Turkish Harem

The Eunuch Role in the Seraglio

Sultan, embourished if Turkey had a problem. In 1567, he had captured the city of Constanța for his people and later had established it as his new capital and palace. The harem has always been the center of attention, and consequently the most important of the entire empire. Ceremonies and court life there are of the utmost importance, and he alone could appoint the sultan himself and considerately provide for the women of the harem the utmost protection and comfort. When one thinks of all this beauty and importance which the harem has enjoyed, it is not surprising that the sultan himself, and correspondingly the monarchs and of sovereigns. Ceremonies and court life there are of the utmost importance, and he alone could appoint the sultan himself and considerately provide for the women of the harem the utmost protection and comfort. The sultan himself was allotted the surprising assignment of being the chief physician to the court. His duties included the supervision of all medical matters, the dispensing of medicines, and many other duties. But from the moment they entered, they could never leave the seraglio. The eunuch was not only a worker, but also a master of ceremonies. He was responsible for introducing the sultan to visitors from all over the empire, and for receiving important guests and dignitaries. The eunuch was also responsible for ensuring the privacy and security of the harem, and for maintaining the decorum of the palace. In the eyes of the people, the eunuch was considered a mark of power and prestige, and was often the subject of much speculation and curiosity. The eunuchs lived in separate quarters, away from the sultan's chambers, and were often considered to be the most important officials in the empire. The eunuchs were responsible for overseeing the harem, and for ensuring that all was in order. They were also responsible for ensuring that the sultan was well cared for, and for providing him with all the luxuries and comforts he desired. The eunuchs were considered to be the most trusted and loyal servants of the sultan, and were often favored above other officials. The eunuchs were an important part of the Ottoman court, and played a crucial role in maintaining the stability and prosperity of the empire.