The past here deathless lives; these selfsame skies Arched on his earth, and somehow still the same; These are the things that long since filled his eyes, Tho now the strange, unearthly light of fame

Seems to transfix each scene; here lives again His prairie youth; we share the book-starved days

When first love died, and shadowed all his ways. Here, too, the later years stand bright and still, When shoulders bowed beneath a nation's grief

Yet held steadfast, and found strength to fulfill The faith that others scorned in disbelief; And here in timeless stone the last fair page,

The shrine that marks him kin to every age.
