mouth of which we were encamped. The morning was beautifully clear, and I took matters somewhat easily, as I had left directions for one of 'our Mongol escort to follow me up with the lunch and my, pony; for, as usual with these antiemen, he' was late, and enjoying his easily-arned 'twelve' hours' repose. Needless to add, a saw hothing of him-nor of the lunch-that day. Working my way steadily up the halfa stream at the bottom of the valley, after a while I made out the forms of two rams at the head of the nala. They appeared to suspect nothing and soon began to feed on the new grass Then two finer rams came to view. I self as comfortable and warm as possible among felt I was in luck, but "there's many a slip." the boulders. Scanning the rugged ground and looking for the best way to approach them I soon recognized that it was not such an easy matter. To follow D the stream bed, over the snow and ice meant being seen. The left side of the valley, a slope of broken rocks and shale, was equally out of the question. I therefore resolved to try the rightside, though not without misgivings, on account of the snow slopes and forbidding-looking precipices. I concluded that if I succeeded in racking this right side that I should be able to work round and above the sheep. After wait-ing for an hour, the fine beasts made things behind a small rocky point. During my long unnoticed. They, finally dipappeared slowly somewhat easier for me by feeding down and watch I had been dreading lest the Mongol with the ponies should appear and scare away the sheep. Chancing this, however, and judging I knew my Mongol, I started off up the stream. Some little way on I managed to cross on a snow-bridge, expecting at any moment to disappear through the soft snow. Then followed a ong and steady ascent over huge boulders o roken rock, interspersed with soft, wet shale. Here was where the local knowledge of the man on the spot would have been invaluable, for I had not been able, up to this, to discern that to reach the high ridge immediately above the sheep was impracticable. A change of plans was, therefore, necessary. Holding on, I tried to scale the rocks to the right, which rocks, I am convinced, would have delighted the heart of an iber r thar. Had a hunter been with me, I could have succeeded in this clambering ascent? as it was, I had to work down to the lower ground again and make the best of a bad job across the open. A bad job, too, it turned out, for having got within one hundred yards of the ridge, b disgust I discovered two rams standing on the top, staring straight down at me. Sinking slowly o the ground, I sat motionless. One ram then moved behind the ridge, and the other, having been joined by a third, followed suit. The las sheep carried a fine head, and was very whiteevidently an old one. As they had moved off slowly, I hoped that I might find them feeding. and be still able to get on terms; but they tool no chances, and when I got to the top of the ridge there was not a sign of Them. I was just about to retire when I saw a grand sight. Several thousand feet above me were my five rame, old rama again, but without success, for these inches.

ridge. The leader, who was the largest and whitest, had thick, massive horns, and they all, with one exception, would have made a fine trophy. I congratulated myself on thus getting a second chance, and watched them as they went "stiltily" along, in the way they move when scared. At length the procession stopped, and they lay down on the steep side of the slope, from whence they commanded the whole of the valley. Off I went again, over huge, sharp boulders of broken rock; but I was soon held up on coming to a large open patch of deep snow.' There was nothing for it but to wait patiently and make my-

After an hour or so, about 1:30 p. m., they rose, stretched themselves, scanned the whole country-side, and again moved slowly off, away to the north. They were evidently in a nervous mood. Following them, after a while I crossed the snow patch ploughing through the snow, which in places was up to my middle, and for lowing in the deep tracks of the herd.

It was stiff work, and was followed by a still stiffer climb to the top of a razor-backed ridge. This I descended the rams still in view The ground here was quite open; but wild sheep usually look for danger from below and I remained round the slope of a high rounded hill, about eight hundred yards abead. I chickly started off to gain the crest of this hill, hoping to intercept the game, but was doomed to further disappoint ment. There was not a sign of them My aneroid here registered eleven thousand feet, and we had reached the highest part of the downs. A cold wind was now blowing, mists came rolling up out of the valleys and it looked like spow.

Taking up a couple of holes in my belt and a pull at my flask. I followed along the north face of the mountain. Avoiding the patches of soft snow, in which I noticed the marks of sheep's hoofs, suddenly on the opposite side, and some way below. I saw m- five old friends, evidently ent on shifting their quarters still further t the west. They must have got my wind. Clouds occasionally hid me from the sheep, so; under cover of these. I determined to make a dash back for less open ground, and to move down and try to get in a shot. I had now been steadily on the move for over twelve hours, and had worked back towards the open valley, though away from the camp. My hurried move failed. Now that the excitement of the stalk was over, I vented deep anathemas on the Mongol's head fornot having brought up the ponies. When within a mile or so of carry I was met by our whole retinue, who had turned out to conduct me i Search parties had gone out, thinking I was lost. After a hearty meal of our standing dish-Has sack mutton-I soon turned in and thus terminated one of the hardest and most pleasant days which have fallen to my lot, and certainly one that I am never likely to forget.

The next few days I spent looking for those fine

eed on the side of a steep ravine. Off they went, towards higher ground, but in no great haste. Riding up to the ridge along which they had disappeared, we dismounted, and soon viewed them again. They were some distance off, feeding on an open slope, which appeared to be secure from attack; but there was one weak spot. After scanning the herd and noticing three or four good heads among them, I started off with Husein o stalk. A warm job it proved, up that steep. loose shale slope, and the pace was perforce slow. At length we made the crest, and took it easy to study the situation. The wind, though light, was shifty, but all seemed well, for the herd were busy feeding. They were what appeared to be about one hundred and fifty vards off, but on a slope somewhat below us. The diffliculty was to select the finest head, for to raise one's self more than enough to just peep over would have soon ended matters. Under such circumstances one is always apt to be deceived as to which head is going to beat previous records! The question, however, was brought to an abrupt conclusion by the herd getting their heads up and beginning to look suspicious. In another t they would have been off, so, taking a second they would have been on, so, taking a quick aim, I fired at the chest of what looked like the largest, as he stood head towards me. A rush and a stampede ensued across the soft face of the steep slope below us. The animals were so bunched up that: it was simpossible to pick out the largest, and the result of my three shots was to bowl over a moderate-sized one only. The herd bowl over a moderate-sized one only. The herd then disappeared at racing speed, and when next seen they were in the big valley a long way be-low. We descended and cut up the dead sheep. This finished, and the old Kalmuk carrying the suggested in place of Bordeaux mix-the seen they were a load for a team the seen th head over his shoulders, we rode off round the ture in order to avoid the burning if left standing on an earth floor. dismounting at the end of a long spur. Thousands of people were rewarded when they bought our famous $900 touring car, the car that took the country by storm, for it proved the equal of any $1200 car shown during the entire 1912 season Our advice for 1913 is the same as for 1912: Wait for the Overland Announcement We will make our 1913 announcement on August 17th. On this date the world at large will awaken to still more car for still less money.
