THE REQUIRED LIST FOR CO-EDS.

FOR MODERN HOUSEKEEPING

Other Branches Formerly Required Are Made Elective As Being Less Essential to Training of Home Makers.

East Lansing-More thorough study of bacteriology and of physics will fall to the lot of M. A. C. co-eds in the future, according to Dean Georgia White, head of the home economics department at M. A. C. A rearrangement of the course for co-eds made by Dean White and ratified by the faculty will place more emphasis on these two subjects to better enable young women to cope with the demands made upon the modern housewife and the re quirements of the twentieth century household. In bacteriology, of which six credits were formerly required, ten Michigan and owned by corporations credits will be required in the future. Ten credits will be required in physics also, where only seven credits were required before.

"Bacteriology is designed partly," said Dean White, "to enable the young women to cope with problems of hygiene and home sanitation, while the physics will fit them better for the using of the mechanical devices which are becoming so common a feature of modern homes.

Botany, zoology and entomology, which formerly were required for coeds, have been put on the elective list. The home economics department looks upon these subjects as desirable for young women, but not essential.
