Legislature Starts Probe of Railroad Lobby in Connection With Desired Rate Legislation.

Lansing-Persistent hints, indirect accusations, veiled charges and damaging rumors centering about the pasenger rate increase bill before the Michigan legislature and having as substance the imputation that a $300,-000 "slush fund" was being used by the companies to corrupt the legislature, culminated in a resolution and all persons interested therein.

Senator Alton T. Roberts, of Mar quette, millionaire mine owner and newspaper publisher, aponsored the resolution in the senate, and Representative Albert E. Petermann, Houghton, general counsel of the Calumet & Hecla Mining company, championed it in the house. The resolution came as a dramatic sequel to the one entered Thursday by Representative Charles D. Symonds, of Menominee pillorying Railroad Commissioner Charles S. Cunningham for having publicly supported the railroad companies in their plea for higher pas senger fares.

Governor Ferris has refused to condemn Cunningham before the entire matter has been thoroughly thrashed out and has urged the legislature to go to the bottom of the affair. He investigating on his own hook

Three Batteries of Artillery to Proceed to the Border.

Washington-The war department ordered three batteries of artillery to proceed from Fort Sam Houston, at San Antonia, Tex., to Brownsville, for duty in protecting the American city from danger growing out of the artillery battle between Villistas and Carranzistas across the river.

At the same time one regiment of ROBBER CLUBBED BY CASHIER was ordered ness at Texas City, Tex., fully equipped and ready to proceed to Browns. ville at a moment's notice.

This action by the war department followed a dispatch from Major-General Funston, in command of the United States forces on the Mexican border, in which he said the situation vas serious and that the use of United States troops might be necessary. Fifteen minutes earlier, Secretary of State Bryan had announced the receipt of assurances from both Villistas and Carranzistas that their fighting would not be permitted to endanger Americans on this side of the

Yes. He Could Do It Easily. Dense darkness separated the travelers each from each. Stones dislodged by the scrambling hoofs of the horses sild down into the canyon, measuring the marrow margin between safety and destruction. Hand gripped hand, and hereath came short.

"It's like the valley of the shadow of the state than the substance of the shadow of death," a voice shuddered out into the darkness.

The guide, directing his team in front, sensed an unspoken fear.

"Just look up," he called hearteningly over his shoulder.

A wedge of brilliant star-strewn sky seemed swung into the abyss, forcing the canyon walls apart and stretching a luminous canopy from crag to crag.

The radiance transformed the valley, into a vision of glory. "I think you would better take my advice." He said, levelly.

Frederic went deathly pale. "Very well, sir," he said in a low, suppressed voice. Without another word he got up from the table and walked out of the room.

He spoke the truth later on when he told Yvonne he could not understand. But she understood. She knew that James Brood had endured the situation as long as it was in his power to endure, and she knew that it was her fault entirely that poor Frederic's white, set face, how the kinew the girl had uttered an idle commonplace, he was annoyed to find himself studying the features of Mallide's looy with an interest that seemed almost laughable when he considered it later on.

His guests found much to talk about in the room. He was soon being dragged from one object to another and the nature of countless things that obviously were intended to be eric had been exposed to this crowning bit of humiliation.
