WANTED...A Man Who Can Beat Beakes

While interest in the coming fall election centers in the contest between former Supreme Court Justice Charles E. Hughes and President Wilson for the presidency of the United States, the campaign committees of both the Republican and Democratic parties will not lose sight of the necessity for the election of a congress that will be prepared to back up the president who may be chosen by the voters. Without a Democratic congress President Wilson would have been a mere figurehead during his term, and while Republicans everywhere are confident that Mr. Hughes will be the choice of the voters, they are also conscious of the fact that he must have a majority in congres to back him up. Republican leaders are counting upon a solid Republican delegation in the next house from Michigan. At present there are two Democrats in the house from this state, and the defeat of both of them is confidently expected. Michigan is normally a Republican state, and nominee who is chosen by the Republicans of this district shall be a man who is acceptable in every way to the voters. He must be clean as a hound's tooth—a man of ability not only along political lines, but

Mr. Beakes does not meet the popular conception of a congressman tons of literature to their constituents without cost to the congressmen provides the means for Mr. Beakes' campaigning, and he has used this privilege to the very limit. With the Democratic candidate lacking in ability to conduct speaking campaign, it seems to us that it behooves the Republicans of the district to choose a man who combines with his other eminent

We would not select a man for his oratorical ability alone. but if, in qualification all the candidates in other respects were equal (and this we do not admit for a moment), we would choose as a man to conduct a campaign against Mr. Beakes the one who could conduct a public speaking campaign, thus bringing direct to the voters a firsthand knowledge of his abilities along all other lines.

Of the condidates for the Republican nomination for congress in he Second district there is but one man who meets the requirement of such a campaign as we believe should be waged against Mr. Beakes. This man is Thornton Dixon. Those of you who recall the campaign made by Mr. Bacon two years ago know that he does not possess the qualifications for such a campaign. Mr. Beakes does not possess them either, and it is but natural to conclude, since Mr. Dixon does possess them, and is otherwise qualified, that of these three men he will be able to secure the votes of the greatest number.

Vote getting ability on the part of the Republican candidate is essential in the coming campaign. Mr. Beakes has had four years in which to build up his political organization, and while the bulk of the work has been done secretly and through the aforementioned governmental frank privilege, it has been no less effective. So we assert that it is absolutely essential that the republicans of the Second district choose a man who possesses not only great business ability, knowledge of state affairs, a winning personality and unblemished reputation, but the ability to go upon the stump and carry his message to the voters

Mr. Bacon is not such a man, but Mr. Dixon is, and Mr. Dixon should receive the vote of every Republican who wants to see Mich igan's delegation in the next house solidly Republican.

this year it is expected to return to the house a solid Republican One of these Democratic congressmen is from the Second Congressional district, and Republicans of the nation are counting upon the Republicans of this district to do their duty by their ticket and the man who will bear the Republican standard this year. We do not underestimate the political ability of the present congressman from the Second district, Mr. Beakes. While his campaigning is of the pussy-footing variety, Republicans must not for a moment assume that he is not busy every minute. In fact he has been busy keeping his "political fences in repair" ever since he became a congressman. Because of this fact it is supremely essential that the congressional
