The Choice of a Republican Congressional Candidate

(Article No. 4)

-Political Advertisemen

Does Congressman Beakes want to choose the candidate who will oppose him at the polls in November?

The charge has been made that he does, and moreover it is common talk among those interested in politics that he not only does, but that he made a desperate effort to assist in the choosing of a Republican candidate for congressman in the Second district. This committee does not charge that Mr. Beakes made such an effort, but it does believe that the voters ofthis county are entitled to the information which has reached the committee of the alleged activity of Mr. Beakes and his campaign committee in reference to the choice of a Republican candidate for congressman; hence this article.

The Adrian Telegram in a recent issue made the charge that Mr. Beakes and his committee had busied themselves in an effort to assist in the nomination of Mark Bacon of Wyandotte as the Republican candidate for congressman, believing him to be the weakest candidate of the three men who are now asking the votes of the Republicans of the Second congressional district.

The Telegram's article was published at the time Judge Bert Chandler of Hudson decided to enter the list against Mr. Beakes, the statement being made in the article that the entry of Judge Chandler would prevent the carrying out of a scheme hatched by Mr. Beakes and his political advisers to secure for Mr. Bacon the votes of a large number of Democrats at the primary in order to insure his nomination. This was done, the Telegram states, because Mr. Beakes and his advisers believe that Mr. Bacon is the weakest candidate and that Mr. Beakes having beaten him once would have little trouble doing it the second time. Judge Chandler's entry into the race against Mr. Beakes, the Telegram claims, put an end to the alleged scheme, because Mr. Beakes could not afford to permit his Democratic friends to cast their votes for Mr. Bacon.

As we stated at the beginning of this article, we do not charge that Mr. Beakes intended to ask Democrats to vote for Mr. Bacon in a vain hope that with such votes as Mr. Beakes could spare he would thus secure as his opponent a man whom he was confident of defeating at the polls in November. but if the charges are true they certainly, furnish Republicans who are anxious to nominate a man who can be elected (and we believe that every believer in the Republican policies wants such a man nominated), with the best possible argument for voting for Mr. Thornton Dixon of Monroe.

If Mr. Beakes were in a position to choose a candidate to oppose him a the polls he would naturally select the man whom he imagined would have the least possible chance of success at the November election. If he had it in mind to ask his supporters in every county to cast a certain number of votes for Mr. Bacon, he did so with the idea that Mr. Bacon is the man whom he can defeat most easily.___

Through a peculiar provision of the Michigan primary law it would have been possible for Mr. Beakes and his friends to have contributed largely to the vote which will be cast for Mr. Bacon. With Mr. Beakes as the only Democratic candidate for the nomination, it would have required but a few votes to nominate him. In fact four or five hundred votes east for him in the district would have insured his nomination beyond any question of doubt, being enough to give him a majority over any scattering votes which may be cast for other candidates.

We question very much whether Mr. Beakes' alleged scheme, clever.as it was, would have resulted as he hoped had it been allowed to go through. Thornton Dixon's personal popularity, his wide knowledge of governmental affairs, his shility as a business man and as a lawyer, and his eminent qualification for the honor he seeks, are such that we bespeak for him a large roportion of the votes of Republicans in the district, so large, in fact, that we doubt very much if Democratic support for Mr. Bacon would have served to counterbalance it. But be that as it may, the alleged scheme was knocked into a "cocked hat" when Bert Chandler got into the race for the Democratic nomination, and Mr. Beakes will have to devote his time to fighting for a renomination instead of trying to choose for an opponent a man whom he believes he can defeat at the hustings.

Mr. Chandler's entry into the race came opportunely, and insures a clean-cut, straight-out contest among Republican candidates for the support of Republicans. In the selection of a Republican candidate to oppose the Democratic candidate Republicans do not desire the assistance, or perhaps it would be better to call it interference, of Democrats. Republicans want the issue to be clearly defined, and it will be. The issue as we see it, is the sentiment expressed by a prominent Republican recently, and quoted before in these articles—"We want a man who can beat Beakes," and with Mr. Beakes kept busy within the confines of his own party, he will have no time to devote to assisting in the selection of a candidate on the Republican ticket.

These charges may be true or untrue. We do not profess to know, but we betray no political secret when we assert that Mr. Beakes and his managers would prefer to have Mr. Bacon nominated rather than Mr. Dixon. Mr. Dixon is, in fact, the only man of the Republican primary ticket of whom they are afraid, and you may rest assured that these astute politicians know exactly which of the three Republican candidates is the strongest.

See to it, Republicans, that in the selection of a candidate for the congressional election you choose a man who can beat Mr. Beakes. Cast your votes for Mr. Dixon who is the strongest man, and the man of whom Mr. Beakes is afraid.
