Investigation by Medical Commission Shows It Can Be Controlled.

NOT DEPENDENT UPON DIET

New York.-Pellagra is infectious, but it is not caused by an unbalanced or inadequate diet, and the most effect tive means of combating it is by installing efficient sewage disposal systems in the communities where it is prevalent, says a report issued by the ommission of the Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital, that has been conducting an extensive investigation in South Carolina. The importance of these discoveries, t was pointed out, can better be appreciated when it is recognized that more than 100,000 persons in this country are known to be suffering from the disease. There probably are many more victims, as several of the states in which it is prevalent are not in the federal registration area, and the extent of the disease thus can only be approximated.
