Rhodesia at One Time Home of Large Population. Rhodesia, the southernmost of the British colonies in Africa, was once the home of a large population.

Even Today, Mantle of Mystery Hangs Over the Country. It has been completely lifted.

They are the remains of a prehistoric and long-forgotten people. There seems little doubt that the city was the work of a prehistoric and long-forgotten people.

Over his head a mantle of mystery hangs. The Rhodesians have employed to full and at times thrilling advantage.

BACK TO HORSES

There could be nothing more foolish than for American farmers to follow the advice of a certain farm bureau official to make more use of horses and less of tractors.

Logically it would follow that if horses should be used, they should be used in the most efficient manner.

And finally, let us advance one more step by using the tractor which is just as much an improvement over horses as the binder is over the sickle.

Call or see us for a demonstration on your farm.

LIVES IN HISTORY

City of Alexandria, Virginia, Is Immortal.

With its Memories of the Greatest American, It Vies Place Only to the National Capital.

Economic clocks cease their ticking. The nation's attention is turned to the city of Alexandria, Virginia.

Count's Stand Motor Traffic. For America's traveling men, London to London, more than 200 miles.

Music Increases Output. Some Englishmen are trying the effect of a gramophone or a piano player on their workpeople.

ECHO FROM VICTORY DAY CELEBRATION. Work of Pick-Pockets Brought to Mind Through Finding of Pocket Books Lost Two Years Ago.

While working in the garden a few days ago, Fred Schable saw a folded newspaper tucked behind the back fence and on unfolding it found three men's pocketbooks badly water-soaked.

On examination one was found to contain a check for $100.00, a Co-Operative Bank check for $50.00, and a check for $50.00.

The date 1919 on one of the papers was a clue. The pocketbooks were obtained by a pick-pocket the day of the soldiers' homecoming.

We all know that L. L. Sloan and Charles Davenport had their pocketbooks picked that day.

It is interesting to note that the registered bond, but of the other two only a few were aware.

Mr. Sloan's pocketbook was found in the city of Alexandria, Virginia.

Mr. Sloan's purse was afterward found near the railroad.

In looking over some old documents a few days ago, T. F. Rushton, came across some papers that belonged to his father-in-law, the late James Knowlan who resided in the south part of the township.

One was a description of a piece of land covered in 1850 by Old Nichols. Another was a receipt for money paid to Morgan Carpenter, township treasurer.
