The treasury could so tangle its instructions to the tax payer that his only solution in making out a tax return was to employ a high-priced expert who might understand the meaning of the law if he did not understand the treasury's instructions.

In the agricultural department there were then, and are now, employed agricultural experts whose province was that of making two staks of grain grow where only one that been growing, and telling the farmer how to accomplish the same result. On each subject they covered they wrote a long winded treaties which no farmer, including the thousands who held college degrees, could understand. They were printed in large quantities and stored in warehouses in Washington, subject to such call as farmers might make, if any.

make, if any.

It was, as I remember, about 1909 that I, as editor of a syndi-1909, that I, as editor of a xyndi-cate service used by country news-papers, conceived the idea of in-ducing the agricultural department to have the real facts, buried in the verbiage of each of the thou-sands of pamphlets and brochures, interpreted into a short statement, expressed in simple English, to be used in these country newspapers. It took four years of insistent arging, and a change in adminisurging, and a change in advalute-trations, to secure a result. At the end of four years, the bureau of inferination of the depart-ment of agriculture was or-ganized with George Wharton in charge. The personnel of the burean consisted of Wharton and two analystants, all capable news-paper writers. By interviewing the asperia, rather than through greading, they did a good job, and fibrough those much valua-ble and understandable informa-tion reached American farimers, with the country press as the medium of distribution. It contin-ned until after the establishment medium of distribution. It continued until after the establishment of the county agent system, which brought scientific farm methods, anniteable to each farm, directly to the farmer. The bureau of information, greatly enlarged in personnel, still exists, but I do not know what function it now performs. The depart ment issues a year book, an expen ment issues a year book, an expensive publication for which the tax payer has been paying for many years, and of which many thousands of copies are printed. The last one issued in 1942 again demonstrations of the control of the con sands of copies are printed. Inlast one issued in 1942 again demonstrates the need of trained interpreters. Of its content covering many farm subjects, there is practicelly no one treatise that can be characterizes instructions from the treasury, the OPA, WFA. WMPA, WLB and countless others of the bureaus, administrations and corporations whose job it is to tell us night.

Up between Hengyang and Lingling we had broken the main Jap force with several attacks and there were only stragglers around the sky. We had been searching them out for fifteen minutes when I saw and heard a remark that was nothing short of classic. From 21,000 feet I observed a lone Zero. But there was a P-40 trailing him, and so I held my altitude and watched. The P-40 close I the gap more and more, icllowing the acrobatics of the Jap, and then drew up for the kill. As the tracers from the six guns went into the Zero I heard the voice of Captain Goss say, "There, Hirohito, you bastard—God rest your soul."
