One of the items they waited for was reveral million tons of canned beef which midwestern packing firms have been producing since Russia entered the war.

Red army front-line troops live almost entirely on this canned beef during offensives. The packers knew they had a deadline to make on their order, but couldn't get enough manpower to do the job. As the days rolled by, even office workers were drafted to the proasys rolled by, even once workers were drafted to the production line. However, the shipment wasn't ready until weeks after the date set by the Russians. The same was true of several other important products. In the end, the British dipped into their own stockpiles in England, and shipped the neces-sary material to fully equip the Red army. Red army.

Finally, when the great offensive was about to start in mid-December, an unseasonable thaw set in on the eastern front, bogging down the Red army equipment. The Russians had massed tremendous new Stalin tanks, larger than anything either the Germans or the other Ailles have seen. These could not be moved except over frozen terrain. When the front froze solid again, Stalin gave the word and the long-delayed winler offensive began.

was a proposal by the British to retain Emperor Hirohito and the Innance pulling class in the post-Japanese ruling class in the postwar setup of Japan.

Sir Paul Butler, leading adviser to the British foreign office, led the appeal for Hirohito.

Behind closed doors at the swank Honestead hotel, Butler made this blunt pronguegement. "We alternate the propagation of the p a good product which was used in every home. In spite of shortages in manpower and materials you had made enough of your product for every war production and civilian use. And you had done all this without increasing the price one penny and then you suddenly discovered that three out of four of your customers did not know or understand your product chiefly because you had never thought to tell them about it. Would your face be red? Well, ours was!

A Symbol of Great Meaning NOW and in the World of TOMORROW

When a recent survey disclosed that three out of four of our customers did not understand a kilowatt hour we thought that something should be done about it because in the bright new post-war world kilowatt hours are going. to be increasingly important in bringing to every home new high standards of electrical living.

A kilowatt hour is really not difficult to understand. Electricity is measured in units of pressure (volts) and in units of current flow (amperes). Multiply these two together and you have a unit of power, the watt. The watt is a relatively small unit and it is customary to use 1.000 wats or a kilowatt as a practical unit of measurement. It represents energy equivalent to 11/3 horsepower. When you use 1,000 watts, or a kilowatt, for one hour you have consumed a kilowatt hour. In subsequent messages we will show what kilowatt hours car. do for you.
