MANCHESTER, MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19

NUMBER THIRTEEN

STATE WINDS UP A BUSY YEAR

Michigan's 1945 emergency act, promoted by lack of state authority in the 1945 session, has been given a partial and successful tryout in the recent minor strikes which ended suddenly on December 7, anniversary of Japanese entry at Pearl Harbor.

Furthermore, drastic regulations were imposed, ready to be proclaimed, which would have virtually confiscated remaining food supplies for a long season.

It was an interesting year of federal and state co-operation in a period of mounting crisis. Michigan emerged from it with new prestige, for the state was one of the few in the nation which found itself with an organized plan to deal with the conditions growing out of lack of coal.

The plan had its origin during World War II. We recall as that year time Office of Civilian Defense with state wide network of volunteer nurses, fire and aircraft wardens, airplane washers, and others. The office has been kept recently on a "fire department" basis by the government.

Among the war time duties of Captain Donald S. Leonard, director of Civilian Defense, was that of State Fuel Administrator.

A recent trip to Washington revealed to Captain Leonard that President Truman was determined not to appease or compromise with John L. Lewis, as his predecessor had done. Lewis appeared to have a clear complexion. Yet the Missouri leader was under the microscope of the press. He declined to accept the advice of Attorney General Tom C. Clark and Reconstruction Director John R. Steadman, both of whom suggested appeasement.

It looked like an all-out show down between the United States of America and a powerful labor union. Washington had set for a long time. Leonard was invited to address a national conference of state fuel administrators Tuesday, December 10.

The week end of Friday to Monday, December 6 to 9, were frantic busy days for Leonard to the Office of Civilian Defense.

On Friday the governor declared a state of emergency under powers invested in him by the special 1945 statute. Secretary of State William H. Dugan, advised the great seal of Michigan, making official the following authority: Control of transportation, traffic, curfew, alcoholic beverages, firearms and other steps needed for protection of life and property. All orders were to be published by press and radio.

As a demonstration of the broad powers held by the governor in such an emergency, violations of all orders became punishable in any state court as misdemeanors.

The first regulations were issued by the governor Saturday, December 7, just prior to Lewis' capitulation at Washington. The orders were forbidden from using electricity for illumination of show windows, outdoor billboards, advertising and many other uses all specified in detail. Hereafter the almost had about the weight of voluntary compliance and violations were widespread. The governor's order gave it the force of state law.

Also on Saturday the governor issued regulations establishing a system of certificates of necessity whereby coal was to be sold by dealers only to persons who could not obtain certificates proving need.

Another regulation which evoked protests from profiteering Table-Toppers in some cities, forbade any business licensed to sell alcoholic beverages from staying open after 10 p. m. This applied to everyone—Detroit's trendy Bowery with a club atmosphere, night floor show to the ritzy Detroit Yacht Club. This regulation was so enforced in a matter of days with a show-down at all places of amusement such as theaters and bowling alleys.

Also in the Detroit picture was the threat of a union general strike on Tuesday, December 19. Labor union leaders would be the John I. Lewis.

The threat of Michigan's emergency law was so significant, as we see it, because it served to emphasize how the responsibility held by the governor under state statute.

Not only is the governor the head of the Michigan State Police with authority to enforce laws, but he is also without consent of local police chiefs and sheriffs.

TWO PLANES NOW IN CONSERVATION USE

Delivery of the conservation department's Republic "See Bee" amphibian is permitting acquisition of one plane each to the northern half of the two peninsula, department officials disclosed today.

The new amphibian will be based at Marquette, while the Stinson "Voyager" land plane, fitted with skis for winter operation, will be based at Roscommon. Since the Stinson, the department's first plane, went into operation in June, the sound of a plane motor has been one more worry to potential conservation law violators.

Besides law enforcement work such as spotting illegal trapping and poaching, the See Bee will be used in winter for observing conditions in downy woodpecker, and for fighting, in large fires, and for occasional aerial photography.

A LETTER FROM MRS. ROBT. LIMMER

Except for a letter sent to Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Dresselhouse from their daughter Mrs. Robert Limmer at Munich, Germany.

I will tell you about our wonderful 15-day leave. Saturday we went to garnish and Oberammergau about 65 miles from here. Its very beautiful country and Oberammergau, you know, is the place where they give the passion plays. It's all very religious around there with statues all along the side of the road.

At each one you'll see from one to six people stopping on their knees and praying. They are supposed to put on this play again late in 1947 or early 1948, so I hope I'll still be here to see it.

Garnish is where all the Olympic skiing contests are held so we went up to see it. It is a beautiful little town up in the mountains, but very cold. Remember the cable car across the Whittipol Rapids at Niagara Falls? We got up our courage and took one of those up to the top of the highest mountain. It sure was cold up there. We could see 4 countries, Germany, Austria, Italy and Switzerland. But I was glad to get down in the valley again.

On Sunday we went to Nuremberg, saw the famous war trial places and at 5 p. m. joined the group of American tourists going to Czechoslovakia. There were only 22 of us, including the children and were the very first group allowed to go there. The first day we went to Marienbad, which is famous for its mineral springs and were the very first group allowed to go there. The recent fuel emergency has highlighted this centralization of power and responsibility for the safety of Michigan lives and the protection of Michigan property.
