SIGLER BECOMES 56TH GOVERNOR

Kim Sigler, one-time Nebraska cowboy, became the 56th governor of Michigan this week.

Dubbed the "toughest man in Michigan" by Karl Detmer in a national magazine, Sigler did not appear to be particularly used and his meteoric rise to greater responsibility and new opportunity.

One year ago he was grand jury prosecutor, widely proclaimed for his fearlessness and legal skill. He was ready to release two batches of indictments in slot machine and chain banking cases. And after the trials, he contemplated a return to an excellent and profitable legal practice in Battle Creek.

What happened in the spring of 1945 was significant to the Sigler administration. It now casts shadows of coming events.

Sigler became overnight the most talked about man in Michigan.

Yes, such was the case despite two major reverses. Frank McKay, still placed in the villain's role in the Sigler drama, was acquitted by a court jury. McKay's acquittal led to an unexpected senate investigation into Sigler's conduct of grand jury affairs. This inquiry, headed by a Mt. Clemens legislator led in turn to Sigler being fired as grand jury prosecutor by Circuit Judge Louis E. Cash.

Loss of the McKay trial was bad enough. But being kicked out as the grand jury prosecutor was a climactic insult. Instead of being a hero, Sigler was pictured as a bum. He didn't like, in fact he was made more than a wet hen.

This writer tries to watch the Lansing parade of personalities and events with some objective detachment. We see the governor as a public servant in a democracy which needs full enlightenment of facts if it is to function for welfare of the people.

We clearly foresaw the logical reaction to the Sigler mind. This observation appeared in our column of March 21, 1946, prior to Sigler's candidacy. Why did Sigler want to run for governor? It is human nature for an individual, who is frustrated by opposition to seek vindication of his position in some manner.

The only avenue available to Sigler was to run for the governorship. With no organization back of him, he accomplished a political impossibility. Why? Largely because of the public admiration of a fighter kicked out as prosecutor Sigler was embraced by a report of the senate legislative committee. The senator hit the press at the eve of the election.

While Sigler did not get a majority of the primary vote, he did lead other contestants by a hefty margin—enough to prove that a lot of Michigan men and women, independent in their political thinking, resented what appeared to be grossly unfair accusations.

These accusations were deemed unfair because the accuser himself was suitably indicted for graft and corruption in his own conduct.

Sigler's political miracle man owes his election to the sentimentality of McKay, an arch enemy? The above back ground of events is important, as we see it, in judging the new personality at Lansing. The Sigler administration promises to reflect the same grand jury temper: An independence in office that may approach a bold disregard for political traditions; a fearlessness in furling out graft and corruption and in establishing preventive fences to minimize their existence in the legislature.

Sigler's message to the legislature was no surprise to any one who has followed the Lansing one man grand jury. He demanded that steps be taken to check graft and corruption in public office. Lobbyists should be regulated; legislative committees should function actively; legislators should get higher wages.

The greatest handicap of the Sigler administration is the threat of a huge treasury deficit. When the voters adopted the sales tax, they also amended the constitution to place the State of Michigan in a financial strait-jacket. Instead of clearing one third of the State's sales tax to local governments as many voters apparently thought, the tax amendment put the state in the unenviable position of being the only state in the Nation whose legislature has less than 25 percent of a major state tax available for legislatively appropriate use.

How the administration can ease the pain out of the wideness of a staggering deficit is perhaps the A-1 problem of Governor Sigler and the state legislature. Some

A Communication

Many complaints have come to me in the past of the many flagrant violations of our ordinances, and upon my recommendation for a part time Traffic Officer and Marshall the matter was brought out in the open the first meeting in December, after much discussion the responsibility was turned over to me to find a man. I then advertised in our local paper and at the last meeting Charles Schorber appeared before the council to apply for the position.

He made a favorable impression whereupon the Council hired him. I then proposed to the Council that he be deputized as a Deputy Sheriff and they concurred in this.

Several days later, I took Mr. Schorber to the Sheriff's office in Ann Arbor and presented him to Sheriff Osborne. After the regular routine and procedure he was accepted and presented with full regalia and at soon as the necessary papers can be completed he will receive proper appointment.

Mr. Schorber who lives on the Ed Logan Farm south of the City was formerly connected with the Dearborn Fire Department and comes highly recommended by Mayor Hubbard of that City.

I want to express my sincere appreciation and thanks in behalf of the Council and citizens of Manchester for the assistance given us by the State Police and the Sheriff's department.

An asking the citizens of Manchester for full cooperation. Mr. Schorber is available 24 hours a day and seven days a week. His telephone number is 6541.

WREATHENWISHER STORE SOLD TO PAT CROWLEY

Patrick E. Crowley of Jackson has purchased the store here which has been owned and operated for more than 20 years by G. H. Breitenweiser. The change of management is effective Jan. 2.

We will all greatly miss seeing "Pat" at the store that for so long has been under his ownership and we wish Pat Crowley success.

After taxpayers must file annual income tax returns on or before March 15, but farmers have to file their returns January 15th.

Murder in Plain Sight

CHAPTER XIII
"Yes, he accused me late that night, but I destroyed the letters. Mr. McCle said I had done an error of judgment for Vicky."
"That's all," he said, looking at her. "I don't know what you did, but I don't know what you did, but I don't know what you did."

"The design of plan was to bring Valancourt the irresistible. He was to marry her and get control of the money, or at least a large portion of it for himself. Then, perhaps, a divorce, and back to Victoria. It probably was Victoria's idea. Then everything would be set for the former Biglow. They could have their fun and play with it, and so interference from a disapproving brother-in-law was not to be feared."

"I don't think that you necessarily were a party to it. I suppose you know about it, but were just too disgusted with what he did to do anything more than to tell the rest of them. What a rotten deal to put over on a fine old lady like Victoria. Her sense was clearly apparent in his face."

Refresh Wardrobe by Restyling Garments No Longer in Fashion

By Erta Haley

I THINK we can divide women into two groups when they look into their old clothes closets. There's the first group who drive these garments as quickly as possible. Then there's the second group. These women thoughtfully pick up each garment, consult their fashion notes and convert the dresses into something that could have come from a smart department store.

To the smart woman, there's not a dress so matter how old that cannot prove useful if she is clever with the needle. Some garments naturally require a good deal of restyling or even complete alteration. Others will need just a slight change in neckline or sleeve making them completely new and refreshed.

Often, frequently discarded old formal which look so woeful when they come out of the closet, are really quite smart materials in them, and think for a moment how neatly they would look in a modern, tailored housecoat, new formal or dress-length suit.

It's not a necktie on an old formal that makes it a dress. It's a neckline, it's an easy matter to alter that. Perhaps you will buy a bit of net and sew this into a new type of collar and sleeves. Squiggle straps may be taken apart and made into a lovely suit perhaps with a modified bustle.

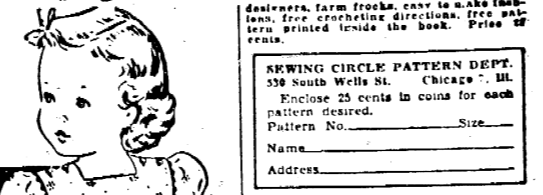

Pay particular attention to such details as the sleeves and the bustle and follow the pattern carefully. If there is not quite enough material, use contrasting ribbon or fabric to make up the difference.

Instead of using tapes to fasten the edges of cloth over the table or shelves use adhesive tape. It looks neater and is easier to do. Egg beaters should be washed immediately after using. Keep eggs out of water.

To clean bottles, jars, or cruets thoroughly, place egg shells and warm soapy water in them and shake well. Clean in time.

Card of Thanks—I wish to extend my heartfelt thanks and appreciation to the following: English coal mining has faced many difficulties in the past. The industry got underway long before any mining machinery was developed, and some of the mines have never adopted modern methods. In many, the vein depth has such wide variations that an uneven floor has been created, making it difficult to put in modern conveyors. Some mines are deep, some are shallow. To modernize and keep them operating at the same time, would require sinking many new shafts.

Government Coal

In England the government now owns the coal mines. The mines were taken over by the government. There, it is known popularly as "nationalization," and the coal industry and its mines are not expected to be returned to the former owners at any foreseeable date. Former owners were given government bonds bearing a low rate of interest. Under this plan the smaller stockholders could cash out their interests if desired, but it is very difficult at this time for the larger holders to exchange their bonds.

Londoners say these factors kept private owners from modernizing to a greater degree in the past: (1) Labor opposed it, fearing not enough jobs would be left; (2) Numerous government regulations retarded progress and hindered modernization; (3) Limited profits and high taxes made it hard to get reserves needed to pay for modern equipment; and (4) Uncertainty with regard to the issue of government ownership, about which there had been constant agitation since World War I. Owners rightly saw no expediency in making large expenditures when there was threat of taking control of the investment, not knowing what type of remuneration they might expect.

Although the conditions set forth to justify the nationalization of England's mines are non-existent in America's coal industry, where equipment is modern and production efficient, these four obstructions to progress have presented themselves in various shapes to plague and sometimes to stall our own industry. We must come to realize that these factors which limit our progress could in time appear the same sort of "nationalization" which now retards Britain's industrial progress.

No sarcasm here. The new coal system gives England the coal she wants! The answer is No. Output per man-hour has not held up—much less improved—under the labor government and nationalization. All methods of recruiting adequate labor have failed. The month of May was one of the best, with some 60,000 of one ton produced per man per day, but since May the average has decreased. The same compares unfavorably with an average of more than five tons produced per man-day in America.

The Minister of Fuel, Mr. Stimson, has just warned that "there may be some shortages in industrial requirements this winter." He anticipates coal fires in Britain at the start of winter will be 4,000,000 tons less than the war maximum. He says that "under the new program, the industry proves to be a failure and doesn't assure the coal we need, it will be a big setback for the whole country." So for the outlook is a sad

BEST NEW YEAR WISHES

Dear Sirs:

The shortage of wire, cotton and porcelain, all necessary items in building transformers, has made it necessary for us to delay your shipment again. We regret this further delay since we know your urgent need for this equipment.

(From a transformer equipment company)

This is only one of the many letters I receive everyday, delaying the shipments of badly needed construction materials.

— Raddy

Yes, folks, this kind of letter will explain to you better than I can, some of the reasons why I am having difficulty today extending electric lines and making new service connections. In many cases equipment is harder to get now than during the war. If you are one of those persons waiting for service, I want you to know that my company is doing all it can of this time to best service to you.
