HAVE SEEN so many bedrooms with just a large chest of drawers, used most often by the men of the house, and no similar table space for the lady of the house. If dresser for her use, why not con-struct a shelf at one of the walls, or in the bathroom, and use it as a dressing table?

dressing table?

This is one of the simplest ways of solving the dressing table problem, even if space is at a premium. The shelf may be small or large depending upon the size available, and the woman's needs.

The construction of this is very simple for it needs only a small piece of wood and two hinges. If draws more is desired, a small piece of wood and two hinges. If draws more is desired, a small set of them made of wood, or constructed out of some boxes to set underneath the shelf, is easy to manage.

WASHINGTON.—There is an animal that is related to the salamander and the frog but looks like a gigantic cartiworm and lives an earthworm's life and is so rarely seen that probably not one person in a million is aware of its existence.

It is the cascillan, a very ancient creature forming the third beauch of the order of emphibians, which were the first backboned creatures to come out of the seas and establish tisemestves un the land nearly 1909 million years ago.

Rumberlag about 30 species, the cascillans is shabit most of tropical America, Africa and Asia. An excellent commute of this strange creature, together with a large number of frogs, has been received at Smithsonian institution from Dr. Paulio Sawaya of University of Seo Paulio, Sawaya of University of Seo Paulio, Brazil. Dr. Sawaya, now in England, expects to return here for a systematic study of the speciment.

The present specimen is about a foot long. Some are known from Peru nearly a yerd long. It might be mistalann either for a titanic earthworm or a snake, but its general appearance is more compared.

ters of both salamanders and frogs.

These creatures spend all their lives burrowing in the soil. They live chiefly on earthworms and come to the surface only very briefly after beavy rains. They usually are seen only by farmers plowing the fields, or in the course of ditching operations. Since they are so easily mistaken for snakes, they are avoided, although so far as known they are shirely harmless. Although they have sharp teeth, they make no effort to bite when handled.

Most of the caecilians are egglaying creatures, the large eggs being attached to one another like beads in a string and wound up in a ball which is incubated by the mother who coils herself around it. The burrows where the eggs are laid are always on a stream bank since the young like all amphilibans, must pass part of their development.

The pretty young woman, married five months ago to William Hagglund, illustrator and cartoonist, has spent her married life with relatives and has been searching the city for "a place of our own."

Resistance Spreads.

That spirit never flagged. Through indian wars, the Pequot war and the war with King Philip, the settlers stayed on, When relations with the mother country became strained, Charies II found the colonial authorities could prevent his royal commission from administering unjust laws. Constantly increasing, the spirit of resistance led to the Boston riots of 1785 to 1795. In 1770, when a garrison of British soldiers was quartered in Boston without consent of the people, three Massachusetts citizens were shot.

In Becomber, 1773, a carge of tea, subject to deep distinct by the colonists, was destroyed by being therews into the marrier. A company of bewammen, the guised as indians, bearded the ship for the new famous "Boston Ten Party." And on April 18, 1775, the first blood of the Revelation was shed at Lexington, followed by the light at Cancerd bridge. On June 17 occurred the Strille of Bernier Killi where
