GENERAL MacARTHUR is re-ported as not favoring univer-nal military training. He does favor theral appropriations for armed service research and for intelliitheral appropriations for armed service research and for intelligence. If General MacArthur is correctly reported, he is the only one of the "big brass" of the armed services who is not definitely sold, for one or more of several reasons, on insittary training as a national policy.

Ouring 1917, '18, '18 and '20, I, as a member of the directory of the Universal Military Training lea gue, worked to secure enactment by congress of a universal gress of a universal military training law. At that time I was more interest-ed in it as a citizen-was more interested in it as a citizenship training meastire than as a means of training soldiars. I believed I saw in the close assuciation of the youth of the nation a means of breaking down the them growing class distinctions.

Proponents of that measure had the army and the President with them in 1918, but not a sufficient congressional vote in both houses to pass the hill. With election of a Republican controlled congress in the fall of 1918 the hill could be passed as a Republican measure. These easies word from the White House that unless the bill were withfrawn given a new title and reintroduced as an administration measure. It would be retood. As an administration measure, the Republican congress refused to pass it.

It is estimated the operation of the present proposed law rould cost the nation somewhere between two and four billions each year. Such a and four billions each year. Such again is meaningless to most of us most in horizon down to what it mould count the individual. On a cost heads of three billion dollars a year the cost for each of our 140 million people — each man, woman and child — would be in excess of $21 a year on an average. Divided between our present 58 million workers the average cost for each would be along the 50 work very from our be close to $50 each year. For our approximately 29 million families, with an average of four plus per family, the average for each family would be better, than $50. Although but a layman, one whose opinion is valueless, I personally am inclined to agree more with the reported opinion of General MacAr-thur than with those who would institute a military training policy for this country. It seems to me that technological research leading to perfection of war-making maling attacks, and the carrying of a war to the other fellow, along with greater knowledge in what the pos-sible enemy is accomplishing along similar lines, would be more effective insurance than would a minimum of training we might give our American youth.

Today a possible enemy is more fearful of our atomic bombs than of any ground army we could put in the field against him. But today we do not know what that possible. nemy is doing to offset possible

FRENCH AS SHE IS SPOKE

The other evening, while listening to a Hollywood broadcast based on the screen play, "Monsieur Besucaire," it fried to jot down the various promunications given on the one program to the title monsieur.

My pencil wasn't quick enough to catch them all; but these lovely variations were noted:

The producer started the ball up to rolling by pronouncing monsieur as "moe-SEER." The announcer topped him with "muh-SHEER."

Unless my receiving set was putting in a few misponnunciations of its own, I also heard "muh-SOO.

"moe-SHEER." muh-SOO-er." and "muss-YER."

tits own, I also heard "mub-SOO, mon-SHEER mub-SOO, mon-SHEER mub-SOO-er," and "muss-YER."

And all these characters were supposed to be native Frenchmen!

It is incredible that before filming the picture and airing the broadcast no one thought of paying some Frenchman a few dollars to teach the actors how to say monsieur.

The same inexcusable oversight was made in filming "Louis Pastleur." The characters called him everything imaginable, but loo-EE pahss-TER. The otherwise splendid picture was thus spoiled for me and, I feel sure, everyone else who has had even a smattering of French.

Now let us give this article a more construeuve angle by explaining how the word monsieur is pronounced correctly.

The secret lies in the vowel sound of the second syllable—learn this and the rest is simple. First, forget the """—it isn't sounded at all. Next, practice saying "YU." giving the "U" a sound that is midway between the "u" of "but" and the short "oo" of "foot." Now place an "s" sound before "YU" and the short "oo" of "foot." Now place an "s" sound before "YU" and practice saying "SYU."

In the first syllable (mon-), the "o" is completely silent, and the "o" is no obscured as to have all most no sound set sill-let us discretione, use an apostrophe to indicate the all but missing vowel.

Mr. Miller also points out that again as in the case of humana, the life-span of the deg has increased tramendously in the last which propared deg freels heve dogs today live to the age of 11 or would be even longer than it is pillars have food habits different than our own, so do dogs, under domesticated conditions, accept and eat the most diverse kinds of feods as long as they supply the required nutrients. In fact, animals raised in laboratories on "synthetic rations" hardly know what to do with a bone or a piece of most. what to do with a bone or a piece of meat.

The feeding habits of the coycos, who is probably the closest American wild cousin of the deg, are a case in point," Mr. Miller states. "When the coyote stalks and kills a sheep, for instance, he desan't go for the lean red meat' his victim off-rs.
