THE BIG CHANCE

HE WASN'T the kind to pick a secretary by the color of her hair. But Bill Hargrave, book publisher and newspaper editor, was going to get the job. He had the decision probably made some time ago. The secretary was leaving town and would get it herself.

Paula could keep her eyes off that light on her desk. The best making mistake in her typing and nervously rubbing the sheets out to start fresh again.

The leased screen her typewriter had had to Nancy. "The lease is all dated up today. Must be a special trip with the new president of Stoppa."

She was just talking to Nelson her supervisor. Nancy took her usual morning. She wasn't used to having Paula talk to her in such an intimate tone. Not that they'd become a close friend that day when Paula had come to the office for the important job on Bill Hargrave's secretary.
