GROUNDSREEFEES can be a decided asset to managers with imagination and perhaps just a touch of the devil in their make up. Between them, the field keeper and the field general can devise some ingenious, if not fiendish, methods to help win ball games.

Take Bill McKechnie, for instance. When he managed the Cincinnati Reds, his four starting pitchers all were low ball pitchers, that is, their throws came in well below the belt.

Quite aware that opposing batters have a tendency to hit such pitches into the ground, Bill or the infield grass grow to three inches and keep the field well watered.

Verifiable is the story of a visit by the White Sox to Clevelaut a tow clear the John the plate on stolen bases. It got so bad, In the plate on stolen bases. It got so bad, In the plate on stolen bases. It got so bad, In the plate on stolen bases. It got so hopeless behind the plate on stolen bases. It got so hopeless behind the plate on stolen bases. It got so when the Indians were hopeless behind the plate on stolen bases. It got so when the Indians catchers rarely attempted a peg down to second, they were that slow.

Anyway, in this particular series, Chicago players tryins to steal second soon, discovered it was full be make the attempt. The

This slowed up many grounders that would have gone through the infield like a shot and permitted the fielders to make easy putouts of what ordinarily would have been hits.

On the other hand, when he moved to Pittsburgh McKechier soon discovered that his two star hitters, the Waner brothers. Lloyd and Paul, frequently chopped down on the ball, literally beating it into the dirt. So he ordered the area in front of the plate packed with hard clay and left to bake, without watering.

The result was that while opposing players were waiting for the ball to come down from the first bounce, one or the other of the Waners was aiready on first.
