Freedom of Choice

Hi, Neighbor!
By Ella V. MacQueen
You don't have to vote Monday. Sure, there's an election, and the results are going to be felt by everyone in the community, but you don't really have to go to the polls. There is no law forcing you to go to a secret police to inform you if you don't vote—no law that forces you to vote for a picked candidate of a tyrannical ruling power. If you fail to visit the polls you won't face arrest or questioning by government officials.

All-Fools Day Foolery Hi, Neighbor!

What's happened to all the old pranks and tricks that were staged by youngsters to trip up the unwary on All-Fools Day April 1? We neither saw nor heard of any trick-playing Monday.

Our most memorable recollection of an April Fool trick of which we were victims was really self-inflicted. She hated to be milked and warily eyed any person who approached with a pail and stool.

We had to confess our deed to Dad before he clobbered and he echoed Lady's "April Fool" and barnyard "The one born every minute" and thereupon used a strap to hold the cow's lethal weapon to her leg, disarming her effectively.

As we watched Yul stride up the aisle with lights reflected grandly on his hair, he turned to look at a lot of our contemporaries whose hair is in the going-gone category would have a new birth of jaunty youthfulness.

And who ever said that "Beggars Can't Be Choosers"? Just look at Egypt's Nasser. He came begging aid—didn't get it—grabbed the Suez Canal—was sent scamping by the Jewish forces—lost all the battles—but won everything he asked for.

He was nobody's April Fool. Who was?
