Look at what you started, Mr. Edison

If Thomas A. Edison were alive today he would doubtless be amazed by our modern electrical world. Foresighted as he was he would hardly recognize the industry he founded 79 years ago.

Today that industry looks ahead to a decade of electrical living that staggers the imagination. Many homes will be totally electric, built around a pushbutton climate, light and color control center.

It will be possible, through automation in the home, to cook food effectly as desired without human effort of any kind. Refrigerated drawers that can be converted into ovens by reversing the flow of current may replace present type refrigerators.

Dishes will be washed by sound waves, electric blankets will both heat and cool. Dusting will be done with an electro-static wand. Conventional lighting will be replaced by the installation of luminous panel walls and ceilings.

Transportation and industry will be revolutionized as the kilowatt is put to more and better use.

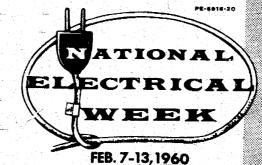

All indications point to a fabulous new decade as . . . ELECTRICITY HELPS TO SPARK THE . . . '60s!
