Historian Links Names With Michigan's Past

DETROIT—Michigan's past abounds with famous names, related to fields far more varied than many people recall—even Michiganians. Prof. Sidney Glazer, of Wayne's history department, co-author of "Michigan: From Primitive Wilderness to Industrial Commonwealth" (Prentice-Hall, 1948) has recounted for State residents the contributions of 23 men now dead whose fame will always be linked with the State.

These names and the cities with which their history is enmeshed show on the map. In the State's automotive history, there are three pioneers long to be remembered among the giants of past and present. Dr. Glazer points out: Henry Ford, bound to Dearborn by birth and otherwise; Ransom E. Olds, whose boyhood was spent in Lansing; and William C. Durant, whose period of greatest success was scored in Flint.

Literary prose figures of note were Rex Beach, born at Atwood, in Antrim County; James Oliver Curwood, who resided in Owosso; James E. Hendryx, Suttons Bay resident; the humorist Ring Lardner, who spent most of his life in Niles; the critic William Lyon Phelps, whose summer homes were in Fort Huron and the Thumb; and Stewart Edward White, born in Grand Rapids.

Poetic composers included Edgar Guest, Detroit, whose volume "A Heap o' Livin'" is widely known; and Will Carleton, who attended Hillsdale College, and whose volume "Over the Hill to the Poor House" was his most famous. Political figures of the more distant past are the great abolitionist James Birney, of Bay City, who was Liberty Party candidate for President in 1840 and 1844; and Lewis Cass, a Detroit resident, who was Democratic nominee for President in 1848 and served as Territorial governor of Michigan, envoy to France, U.S. senator and cabinet member.

More recent political figures include Frank Knox, of Sault Ste. Marie, who became secretary of the Navy; Chase S. Osborn, also of the "Soo," newspaper publisher, author and governor; Woodbridge N. Ferris, founder of Ferris Institute in Big Rapids, governor and U.S. senator; Frank Murphy, born in Harbor Beach, who served successively as mayor of Detroit, governor, U.S. attorney general and Supreme Court justice; and Arthur H. Vandenberg, Grand Rapids newspaper publisher who became a widely known U.S. senator.

Two Michigan generals gained wide acclaim. Gen. George Custer, whose home was in Monroe when the Civil War broke out, became a hero of that war and later a famous Indian fighter. Gen. William R. Shafter, who spent his boyhood in Galesburg, later became one of the most popular of Spanish American War heroes.

Inventor Thomas Edison spent his boyhood in Port Huron, worked as a candy salesman on a train which ran to Detroit and studied in the Detroit Public Library between runs.

Physician William Beaumont enshrined himself by his experiments and observations in the stomach of the Frenchman Alexis St. Martin on Mackinac Island in 1822.

Geologist Douglass Houghton employed by the State after serving as mayor of Detroit, discovered copper in the State's Keweenaw Peninsula.

ODD FACTS ABOUT DOGS

By Dr. E. M. Gildow
Director, Friskies Research Kennels

Dogs enjoy a few advantages that we don't. They seldom develop cavities, for one thing. Tartar may collect on teeth unless it's removed periodically and this will push the gums back. This allows bacteria to develop deep along the roots of the teeth, loosening them or causing abscesses. Even so, when extracted such teeth seldom show cavities.
