Local man conquers Appalachian trail

By Marsha Johnson Chartrand
 Special Writer

Ask Donald DuRussel what he's been doing lately, and he'll tell you, "I went for a walk."

Not too remarkable, unless you consider that his "walk" was 2,160 miles long, stretched over five months, and took him from Georgia to Maine.

DuRussel has just returned from walking the famous Appalachian Trail. The trail was begun in the 1930's and takes hikers through a dozen states, mostly through wilderness areas.

According to DuRussel, the first person to hike the entire trail from start to finish did so in 1946. By 1972, about 300 people had walked the trail, and now about 5,000 people have completed it, making DuRussel part of a pretty elite group.

"On the average, 2,000 to 3,000 start it each year but only 200 to 300 finish," he said. "I met a lot of guys who had started it, but they quit because they hurt. I hiked with one guy for 35 days, and he ended up quitting."

THERE ARE varied reasons for quitting the trail, says DuRussel. Most of them involve pain. Among his hundreds of photos are pictures of people's sore, tired, blistered feet. His own worn out boots - the second pair he's had since March, when he began - are testament to the rigors of walking the trail. He says his knees really felt the pain of walking, too.

"Sometimes I would walk downhill backwards or sideways: anything to ease the hurting in my knees."

On the trail, with a "trail name" of Potato Picker, DuRussel averaged about 14 miles a day.

"My best day was 27 miles, and some days I'd take a zero day" - these were the days when hikers go to town and rest themselves. DuRussel stayed mostly in shelters along the way, built along the trail, ten or fifteen miles apart, especially for the benefit of hikers on the trail. Sometimes, if the weather was good, he tented.

THE FIRST twenty days brought rain and one snow day with 10 inches of snow. "I walked in the clouds that day," he said, adding that there was nothing idyllic about it - just plain cold and barren.

On days like these there was nothing to do but keep walking, to avoid hypothermia.

"I'd hike till I got to a shelter, get out of my wet clothes, hang up those wet clothes wherever I could, and crawl into my sleeping bag while I slept in my dry ones. The next morning I would get up, put on my wet clothes again, and get back on the trail." With only two changes of clothes, there wasn't much else he could do.

When asked why he decided to walk the trail, DuRussel responded simply, "Because it's there."

"I met a lady from Michigan Center who is 70, and she's done it twice. I met people from all different backgrounds - lawyers, doctors, judges, people who just finished college. One person I met was a CPA from Maine."

"THEY DO IT because they like to hike. I did it just because it's something I've always thought of, and now was my time to do it. Some people wait 'til they're retired - but I also met a lot of people in their 20's. People my age are in the minority along the trail."

"The oldest person I saw was an 82-year-old man on the trail.

School board appoints new member in unanimous vote

By Shawn Lawrence
 Associate Editor

Manchester Township resident Karen Smith has been appointed the newest member of the school board.

Smith was appointed by a unanimous vote to fill the vacancy left by former Trustee Brian Evans who resigned recently. She will serve as a board member for the remainder of the term, and the position will open up again in about eight months.

At that time, Smith said she will decide whether she wants to run for the position.

Smith, 41, is married to husband Chuck, and the family has two sons. She moved to the Manchester area when she was a sophomore in high school, and she graduated from Manchester High.

She works as a caregiver for an elderly neighbor, and she also does a lot of volunteer work in the area.

She serves on the board of directors for the Community Resource Center, where she is a proponent for the youth asset building project. She is also the secretary for the Manchester Area Responding to Kids (MARK), formerly the Coalition for Drug Free Youth in Manchester.

SHE SAID that she believes that MARK is an excellent forum for adults to get involved with children in the community.

Karen Smith

"What we do (in MARK) is try to promote a caring place for kids and try to get involved with kids," she said. "We have kids come to us if they have a community project they are interested in starting."

Smith has been in regular attendance at the Manchester school board meetings in recent years, because she said she has an interest in the well-being of the children in the community.

"I'm at all the school board meetings. I'm always at the high school," she said. "The last two years, I've been really involved in youth assets program, getting the school on board with that. I have been in there plugging away."

Smith said that as a board member, she will try to be an encouraging voice within the school community.

"I SEE true leadership as an on-going process of offering trust, encouragement and congratulations," she said. "It is my hope that I can do that as a board member."

Smith said that two immediate concerns the board is dealing with are building a new high school and updating the curriculum.

Smith said that she was approached by School Board President Paul Kluwe and asked if she was interested in filling the board vacancy.

"We had a long conversation about what it entailed," she said. "I talked to my family, and we decided it would be a good thing."

Kluwe said he has confidence that Smith will do a good job.

"I know that is widely respected in the community and she will be an exceptional board member."

Aside from her work and her volunteerism, Smith said she is also interested in writing. She has completed one novel, a novel she describes as 'for women.' She said she is trying to find a publisher for that book.

She recently helped write a mystery novel with a local group of writers.

She has also written two children's books, one of which is now being illustrated.

the youngest was an 11-year-old with his dad and brother."

"I met people from all around the world - Australia, Israel, Germany, England, Canada, and just about all fifty states. There are such a wide variety of people along the trail, and by the time it's over, they all seem like family," he said.

Since the average hiker burns 4,000 calories a day, DuRussel lost a total of 55 pounds during his five months on the trail.

"I really wasn't in shape for

Young farmers are becoming scarce

By Shawn Lawrence
 Associate Editor

At 25 years old, John Schiel isn't ready to retire just yet. But in his chosen profession, farming, he has seen people forced to retire younger than him.

Schiel, who farms 150 acres in Bridgewater Township with his parents and his brother, has been farming his whole life. But changes in the industry across the country have been pushing farmers out of business for several decades now. Schiel said that like other farmers, he is always worried that his family could be next.

Schiel and his family inherited the farm from his grandfather in 1994 - the farm he has lived on his whole life. On their farm, they grow corn, wheat, alfalfa hay, and keep 150 sheep.

Farming, he said, is more than just a way to make a living.

"It gets in your blood and it's hard to get it out," he said. "It's hard, driving around and seeing all these farms turning into houses. We had one developer try to buy it from us a couple years ago, but we'll never sell it, hopefully we never will have to."

"I ENJOY it," he said. "You get discouraged with it at times, but something different is happening all the time."

"You're fixing a flat tire on a tractor one day, spraying a field, or working with a ewe in labor the next day. I hope to be able to do it as long as I want to, but if it comes to where the money's not working out right, maybe we'll have to look at selling some of it off."

Schiel's grandfather worked the land until he was 71 years old, and he made a living at farming. Schiel said he doesn't know what's changed in the past decades that farmers can no longer make a living growing food and raising livestock.

"MY DAD helped grandpa farm before he died, and he was a full time farmer. We've been farming it ever since. We've tried a lot of things to make money. We try to rotate things into the fields we don't use anymore, we try to start working them up.

"We're going to quit growing wheat this year. The prices just weren't there."

Schiel said that farmers aren't compensated fairly for their contribution to the economy. As an example, he said that with one bushel of wheat, a baker can make 60 loaves of bread, each of which sell for $2. The baker grosses $120 for a bushel of wheat that a farmer sold for $1.70.

"Now we're thinking maybe we'll try beans," he said. "We haven't tried beans before."

Schiel said that often times people don't have the respect for farmers that they used to.

"If I'm taking wagons down the road, and we have to take main roads now, they're always really rude to you," he said. "Maybe if they had to be out there growing their own food, they'd have a different opinion."

SCHIEL SAID that he had a close call on a road this year when he almost flipped his tractor trying to avoid a traffic accident.

"People are in such a big hurry to get some place," he said. "What does that pay if you hurt another person?"

Local business people get locked up

By Shawn Lawrence
Associate Editor

Manchester 'prisoners' raised over $5,500 in bail money for a worthy cause during a fundraiser last Thursday.

The event was dubbed a 'lock-up,' and was sponsored by the Muscular Dystrophy Association.

Business and community leaders agreed to be locked up for one hour by the Muscular Dystrophy Association, and during their period of incarceration, to try to raise bail money by calling friends from 'jail.' Unlike a normal prison scenario, the inmates were allowed unlimited phone calls, and were ushered to and from jail in a limousine.

Prisoner Keith Reed was able to raise the most bail, pulling in $1,125.

THE FOLLOWING Manchester residents were arrested, booked and locked up to await bail: Terry Aiuto of Tropical Effects Tanning Salon, Ruth Burch of Stitches in Manchester, Matthew Donnellon of State Farm Insurance, Linda Ery of Veterinary Standard, Shannon Fleck of Dan's Westside Automotive, Frank Furnari of Classic Catering, Kathy Fusilier of Fusilier Family Farms, Assistant Principal Tom George of Nellie Ackerson Middle School, Bonnie Greenwald of Spring Hill Studio Kim Lee of Kim's Country Kitchen, Keith Reed of Keith's Barbershop, Paula Saft of SGF of America, Interim Superintendent Bob Smith of Manchester Community Schools, Danielle Smith of the Dairy Queen, and Marty Travis of K & W Equipment.

THE FOLLOWING businesses also made donations to the event: Baker's Dozen, Black Sheep Tavern, Dairy Queen, Frank's Place, Haarer's Meeting Place, Kim's Country Kitchen, and the Manchester Market.

The Manchester Township Fire Department hosted the event.

The MDA lock-up fundraiser program has been in existence for ten years. This year marks the first time the lock-up has come to Manchester, and organizers are calling the event a success. A spokesperson for the MDA said the group would be back next year to make another didn't want to live anymore. He had consumed two bottles of whisky and several beers. The man agreed to seek psychiatric treatment at the University of Michigan Hospital. His .22-caliber rifle was taken by police for safekeeping.

Trees and other items available

The Washtenaw County Conservation District Fall Tree & Native Plant Sale is taking place soon. Evergreen trees, native wildflower and grass species, wildlife habitat planning and tree identification books, marking flags and other conservation products are available.

Planting trees can provide many benefits. A properly planted windbreak can save you up to 35 percent on the cost of heating your home. They also reduce wind erosion, protect livestock, reduce stress on crops and gardens - which increases yields, and act as an excellent wildlife habitat.

An additional feature for the fall sale is a windbreak cost share program. Landowners planting trees for field, home or farmstead windbreaks may be eligible to receive a 50 percent cost share on the price of trees. Site preparation and weed control costs must be paid for by the landowner.

FUNDS FROM the cost share program come from an energy conservation grant received by the Conservation District from the Michigan Department of Agriculture.

Trees help reduce soil erosion on slopes by providing permanent cover for the soil. The root system of trees holds the soil together when exposed to moving water, and once established, they contribute a layer of needle litter (mulch) that slows erosion by reducing soil exposure to wind and rain.

Trees can also provide habitat that can attract wildlife to your property. The three basic needs of wildlife are food, water and cover. Evergreen trees provide good nesting cover for birds and thermal cover for larger animals, while the cones these trees produce are an excellent food source for birds.

Native Michigan plant species are decreasing in number due to various factors, including development and urban sprawl.

WHETHER YOU have a small suburban lot or a large countryside spread, you can help be a steward of the land by planting native Michigan species in your backyard.

Orders for trees will be accepted through Sep. 30, with tree pick-up scheduled for Friday, Oct. 8 at the Washtenaw Farm Council Grounds, 5055 Ann Arbor Saline Road. Orders for Michigan native plants will be accepted through Sep. 17.

First day of school brings hopes, fears

By Marsha Johnson Chartrand
Special Writer

Kevin Thompson turned five years old on August 17. Along with a friend party at Kids Kingdom and the toys and games that you'd expect a five-year-old to receive, he got a special gift - a Batman backpack.

Kevin is going to use his backpack to carry books, papers and pencils back and forth to Klager School this fall. The oldest child of Kim and David Thompson of Ely Road, Kevin is starting kindergarten.

A bright-faced blond with a definite mischievous streak, Kevin professed a bit of shyness at first and said he wasn't looking forward to school at all. But one look at his quick grin made it obvious that he was kidding around. This is one little boy who's certainly eager for kindergarten.

Kevin's favorite subject at Manchester Co-Op Preschool was Show and Tell, but he also liked working with his letters and is looking forward to reading in kindergarten. He already knows how to spell his name, K-E-V-I-N, and knows that he won't have to bring his lunch to school.

"He's really ready for this step," says Kim Thompson. "Kids have so much enthusiasm at this age. I'm looking forward to him having his wide variety of interests expand even further in school."

His mother is sure that Kevin will enjoy seeing all of his friends from preschool every day. His good buddy, Paul Casari, will also be in Mrs. Supers' morning kindergarten class.

Kevin and Paul came to Klager School together one afternoon during the week before school started, to find their names on Mrs. Supers' class list. Both were pretty excited but the real fun began as they rounded the corner of the school to the playground. There they headed straight for the new play scape built by the PTO and Manchester Kiwanis Club.

"It does sort of bring a tear to my eye, now that I'm here," says Thompson. Earlier, she had been excited to think of her eldest child starting school. But holding one-year-old Sarah in her arms, and watching her son exert a little show of independence as he approaches this milestone, started to tug at her heartstrings.

Thompson plans to stay active in Kevin's education, just as she has been from the start of his preschool years. She has served on the board of Manchester Co-Op Preschool and is looking forward to helping at school, being a member of the Klager PTO, and other school-related activities. This year she is also making the additional commitment of driving him to school so that he can be in a.m. kindergarten, as the morning bus doesn't head south of town.

She firmly believes that remaining involved in her children's education is vital to their success in school.

ON THE FIRST morning of school, Kevin and his mom and sister came into the Klager gym and met up with all the other kindergartners. He had chosen his tie-dyed t-shirt and shorts himself for his first day of school, brightening up what was an otherwise dreary day outside. He looked just a little apprehensive, to be sure, yet he eagerly got into line with his friends to head into his classroom.

Equally as pensive, Kim Thompson was certainly among those moms with a big lump in her throat as she watched her oldest son head off to school for his first day.

"It was harder than I thought, but at least preschool had prepared me for it a little bit." Sarah, rather than missing her big brother, is enjoying the adventure of driving with him to and from kindergarten.

Later in the morning, Kevin and his friends had settled into their classroom. They had each inspected a basket full of math manipulatives and were ready to listen to a story read by Mrs. Supers.

With bright "kindergarten smiles," the 23 students in Mrs. Supers' a.m. class were happy to pose for a photo.

The kindergartners' special friend, Froggy, was sitting with them. If Froggy did not behave, he was asked to sit up straight and keep his legs crossed, Indian-style, just like all the good boys and girls.

During the first few weeks of school, the kindergarten curriculum focuses on safety - school buses, obeying signs and rules, and learning about the community helpers who keep us safe. Policemen, firemen, bus drivers and crossing guards are all visitors to the classroom during the earliest days of the school year. This will provide a good reminder for Kevin, who went to two weeks of "Safety Town" classes earlier this summer, sponsored by the Clinton school district.

Visited on the third day of school, Kevin was still smiling and enjoyed some high jinks with his friends while waiting in line for the next activity.

Adjusting to kindergarten seems to be an easy transition for this brand new five-year-old. His favorite subject so far is "writing."

He loves to be writing his name and enjoys the journal time that kindergartners spend working with their crayons and pencils. Kim Thompson is happy with the kindergarten experience so far. She sees new worlds opening up to Kevin as he's learning exciting new things.

"I'm amazed at what he knows and how much more he learns each day," she says. "It's just so hard to believe he's so grown up already."

TIA HARVEY'S whole face smiles when she looks at you. Though she might pretend to be shy, Tia is quick to correct you - with a giggle - if you happen to say something silly or wrong. Tia is the daughter of Grant and Joan Harvey of Austin Road.

What does Tia think she will do in school all day?

"Make cookies, with M&M's, draw a picture, and play with toys." She recalls those fun activities from the spring kindergarten round up, and hopes she'll get to do them every day.

Tia's three older siblings - Tyler, Rosalyn and Clay - have pretty much prepared her for the realities of school life. She knows what happens if you don't behave at school:

"If you do anything wrong you will get in trouble and they'll send you to somebody." She assures her big brother that she is not going to get into any trouble.

One thing that Tia looks for-

ward to during kindergarten is playing on the playground, but she wasn't sure what "recess" meant when that term was used. She will quickly get used to that! She has already spent time enjoying the new playscape at Klager and is excited that she can play on it every day. She also likes gym and thinks that it

'Sam's Shot Busters' take to the road

By Marsha Johnson Chartrand
Special Writer

Sam Billetteaux is not ten years old yet, but in the past year he has learned a lot. He's learned how to play hockey, he's learned all the things a kid needs to go into fifth grade, and he's learned how to give himself shots. Because in this past year, Sam has also learned more than he ever wanted to know about a disease called diabetes.

Last September on the first day of school Sam was diagnosed with Type I Diabetes (commonly known as juvenile diabetes). In the year since he was diagnosed, he figures he has used up about 1,250 needles. That estimate seems conservative when you look at the gallon-sized "sharps" container that his mother, Laura, takes to the recycling center each month.

Those first few days, which were spent in Mott Children's Hospital, were scary ones for Sam and for his family. Sam's body had stopped producing insulin and he had come dangerously close to slipping into a life-threatening diabetic coma.

IN THE intervening year, however, the whole family has been educated in diabetes management and it has changed their lives.

"Our lifeline to U-M has been a nurse specialist named Nugget Burkhardt," says Laura Billetteaux. "Nugget is a clinical diabetes educator, and she is the one who has answered our pages at all hours of the night." She has been right there for the Billetteaux family through the year-long ordeal.

Unfortunately, the ordeal isn't over yet. Although there is treatment, there is no cure for Type I Diabetes. New treatments are being developed constantly through research.

Less than a month after his diagnosis, Sam and his family - sister Carolyn, mom Laura, and dad Neal - proudly participated in the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation's "Walk to Cure Diabetes" held at the Washtenaw Community College Campus.

IN THE short time since his illness began, Sam's team comprised of family and friends had raised over $1200 in sponsorships for the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, and Sam earned the JDF's "Golden Sneaker Award" presented to those who raised over $500 in pledges.

This year, Sam's team will be named "Sam's Shot Busters" and their goal is for 30 team members to raise $3,000 in community pledges. The Manchester Pharmacy is sponsoring the t-shirts for the team, which Sam designed himself. The team will walk a three-mile course through Domino's Farms in Ann Arbor, on Sunday, September 26.

Laura Billetteaux has written an eloquent letter that appeared on last week's editorial page, asking for the support of the community.

HER WORDS come straight from a mother's heart and describe both the pain and the pride that she and Sam have gone through together in the past year. They also express hope for the future.

Sam wants to become part of another team this fall, too. The U-M Diabetes Clinic is now accepting ten-year-olds in their insulin pump program, which would provide measured doses of insulin continuously throughout the day. That would avoid the many finger pricks and three or four shots of insulin every day for Sam. The insulin pump is a small catheter attached to a pager-sized device which would help Sam avoid the wide fluctuations in blood sugar that are part of many diabetic patients' daily routine.

"This would be a better way of controlling diabetes," says Billetteaux. Still not a cure, but they are one step closer each day.

Sam and his Shot Buster friends will take a lot of steps toward finding a cure for diabetes, later this month. If you'd like to help - either by sponsoring a walker or walking yourself - you may call the Billetteaux family at 428-8265.

Local student will attend D.C. conference

High School student and Manchester resident Paul Kappler has been selected to attend the National Young Leaders Conference in Washington D.C. from Dec. 7 through Dec. 12.

The National Young Leaders Conference is a leadership development program for high school students who have demonstrated leadership potential and scholastic merit. Kappler will be among 350 National Scholars attending the conference from across the country.

The theme of the National Young Leaders Conference is The Leaders of Tomorrow Meeting the Leaders of Today. Throughout the six-day conference, Kappler will interact with leaders and newsmakers from the three branches of government, the media and diplomatic corps.

Highlights of the program include welcoming remarks from the floor of the United States House of Representatives and a panel discussion with prominent journalists at the National Press Club.

KAPPLER WILL also meet with his senators and representatives or an appointed member of their staff to discuss important issues facing Manchester and the nation.

To complement these special meetings and briefings, Kappler will participate in a number of leadership skill-building activities. In one activity, If I Were President, students role-play the president and cabinet members responding to an international crisis. Students also participate in a judicial simulation. Testing the Constitution, in which they examine actual Supreme Court cases.

The National Young Leaders Conference culminates with the Model Congress, in which scholars assume the roles of United States Representatives by debating, amending and voting on proposed legislation.

The National Young Leadership Council is sponsored by the Congressional Youth Leadership Council, a nonprofit, nonpartisan educational organization. Founded in 1985, the council is committed to fostering and inspiring young people to achieve their full leadership potential.

MORE THAN 425 members of the United States Congress join this commitment in serving on the council's Honorary Congressional Board of Advisors. Each year, only 7,000 youth nationwide may participate in the 20 sessions of the National Young Leaders Conference.

"The conference provides the opportunity for students, like Paul, to distinguish themselves as tomorrow's leaders," said Michael Lasday, the Council's Executive Director. "Scholars not only gain knowledge and experience in the nation's capital, they leave with a sense of accomplishment and an increased ability to face the challenges of the future."

Kappler is the son of Roger and Dulce Kappler, and is a senior at Father Gabriel Richard High School in Ann Arbor.

He is a member of the football team, the History Club and has participated in Christmas in April. He also helped construct Parable House for Habitat for Humanity and worked at Judson Collins Youth Camp. He is a member of Westminster Presbyterian Church.

Back packs can cause kids health problems

By Wanda Fish
Special Writer

When you see them walking along towards school, their backpacks loaded, arms swinging, it makes you smile.

There go our little ones, shouldering their responsibilities along with their books, lunches, notebooks and the things kids like to carry. The backpacks are cute and colorful. As the kids and books get longer and heavier, so do the backpacks.

But medical professionals are seeing more back aches, shoulder and neck pains among the nation's children. Combined with increasing hours hunched over a computer in a setup that isn't adjusted for the individual child, these children may be headed for the same kind of chronic back pain from which many adults suffer.

Lost time due to back pains costs the U.S. economy an estimated $50 billion annually.

So, what's a mom or dad to do? Pay attention to your child's ergonomics. The rules are pretty simple.

A child should never carry more than 15% of his or her body weight in a backpack. The pack should fit the child, with wide straps and an even distribution of the weight in the pack, which should fit snugly.

At the computer, the child should sit erect, with the lower back supported and eyes level with the top of the monitor. Feet should not dangle. You can make adjustments to adult equipment - add a box for a footrest and build up the chair. Insist that the child take regular breaks to move around and exercise. Build some stretching exercises into your kid's habits.

While you're at it, join your kids in the stretching exercises and rethink your own ergonomics.

Parenting classes offered

The Community Resource Center and the Manchester Community Schools are offering Parent/Adult enrichment opportunities at the Manchester Middle School beginning with an introductory session beginning at 7 p.m. Wednesday, Sep. 22. That session will introduce the participants to the information and activities that will be included in the series.

The cost is $5 per session. Scholarships are available for people who are financially restricted.

The interactive sessions will focus on youth development, and the theme of the six-week series will be Developing Will and Character.

In February, the Search Institute provided results of a survey conducted with 499 Manchester students from grades six through twelve. In reaction to this survey, the Community Resource Center developed a training program to be presented by Barbara H. Shumard, Clinical Social Worker.

The purpose of the parent/adult enrichment opportunities is to provide the results of the study of Manchester youth, so that parents can learn what their children need and how to pull together to make a difference for the present and the future.

The presenter and participants will explore in detail information that will enhance children's competence. The sessions will provide the opportunity to learn how to develop their self awareness, self control, empathy, listening abilities, conflict resolution and cooperation.

The session topics are as follows:

- Week I: Understanding self defeating emotional impulses
- Week II: Developing a flair for wisdom
- Week III: Healthy adults - healthy kids
- Week IV: Establishing healthy emotional habits
- Week V: Family life and trauma: Marriage, single parenthood, step families
- Week VI: Putting positive youth development into action.

To register, please use the form that appears in this week's Enterprise, or call the Community Resource Center at 428-7722, or Barbara Shumard at 428-1481 for more information.

Falling Great Lakes levels present a local concern

A headline in the Wednesday, Aug. 25 edition of the Detroit News brings home the seriousness of "Receding Great Lakes hurt lives, jobs, beaches." Jeremy Pearce states that uncovered toxins threaten water and wildlife. At stake are millions of dollars, thousands of jobs and a long-accepted way of life.

TV LUDWICK
SENIOR CITIZENS NEWS

From levels measured one year ago, Lake Michigan and Huron have slipped 17 inches. Lake Erie set a 30-year record low in July, alarming the scientists and boaters who charted it. It is down by 17 inches. Bordering Metro Detroit, the broad river delta known as Lake St. Clair has dropped 16 inches. Lake Superior is two inches above last year's level.

Bolstered by recent rains and held back with special gates, Superior's small gains are not enough to compensate for losses in other lakes.

Then there is the danger of uncovered toxins that threaten water and wildlife. Dredging is reviving a century of waste chemicals in sediment, posing hazards to fish and humans.

Scientists say PCBs, mercury and farm pesticides are likely entering the food chain, to reach from the smallest lake organisms to game fish, and ultimately to residents' kitchen tables.

Daughter Janet and husband live on a bayou off Mona Lake which has a channel to Lake Michigan. Water level is controlled by the lake, and being down 17 inches has their lake front property way down in value.

Janet wrote saying that everyone involved in the possible dredging of our bayou has come to the conclusion that it won't be done this year, or even ever. Because of the contaminants we can't dump dredged material where we had earlier anticipated and the cost is prohibitive.

Her hubby said that this is too late in the season to be doing it anyway - the boating season is nearly over. They'll wait and see what next spring brings.

She also said she had talked with a friend last week that lives in Connecticut and they are very concerned if they will have enough water to drink. (Now that is serious when your very lives depend on clean, clear water). Janet also sent a clipping entitled "Great Lakes water-sale moratorium urged" from the Muskegon Chronicle which may make another column-starter in the future.

Cross Country runners training for season

The Cross Country team begins training by attending the Hojakanama Cross Country Camp in Hillsdale. Runners put in long miles - up to 70 miles in 6 days - to get a jump-start on the season.

Head Coach Craig Vitale is excited about the season and some extremely talented and dedicated runners.

While the boy's team is looking for runners, the girl's team brings 10 runners to the starting line including four core runners.

If you are interested in joining the team contact Coach Vitale at practice right after school. For more information please see story on page 2-B

Manchester Golf squad begins home schedule

The Golf team launched their season at home with the 5th Annual Manchester Invitational at Reddeman Farms. They followed that up with a Conference Jamboree and then the Blissfield Invitational where they scored the 3rd best Manchester time in the history of the event.

Coach Dan Galaska is excited about his young team. For more information, please see story this page.

Equestrian season to begin next week

Equestrian Head Coach Sandy Sheats looks forward to training her young riders.

Equestrian is a year-round sport with riders participating in 4-H events and other area events. Athletes can be trained in a season but horses can not according to Sheats.

Look to this section next week for a preview on the upcoming Manchester High School Equestrian Team's season and what the sport is all about.

Learn about seats, classes, equitation and gymkhana as Sheats prepares to take a young class into competition.

Enterprise will highlight outstanding performances

The Manchester Enterprise will take nominations from coaches, counselors, or teachers of players to highlight who has performed exceptionally well on and off the field.

There are many athletes who are more than just sports heroes. Some are honor roll students, others help in the family business, some are accomplished musicians.

The Manchester Enterprise would like to honor these young athletes

Football team opens with loss against Clinton

By Colleen O'Neill

Special Writer

Manchester Varsity football got underway with a disappointing loss to Clinton. Final score 26-14.

Head coach Wes Gall felt the Manchester team had a typical Manchester game.

"We got the ball, we moved it down to their 35 and we had a 4th and 7," Gall said. "We were a little too far away for a field goal and too close for a punt, so we went for it."

The pass was overthrown and Clinton took over. The teams traded the ball again before Clinton finally put together a scoring drive.

"The big play on that drive was when they were 3rd and 19 and Brett Shadley, their wing back, scored on a 28 yard run," Gall said.

"It was a misdirection play, our people on the backside came down too far, he out-flanked them and he scored," Gall said.

After missing the extra point, Clinton kicked to Manchester who put together an impressive 80-yard scoring drive.

"We moved the ball down the field," Gall said. "We were helped by a Clinton penalty that gave us a first down."

On 3rd and 12 Evan Wahl ran 19 yards for a first down. Then Breilein threw a 35-yard touchdown pass to Jason Schaible. Punches kicked the extra point and the Dutchmen led 7-6.

Coach cites a lack of intensity

In the ensuing drive, Clinton marched the ball down the field, using the clock extremely well. They started with a 13-yard run by fullback Ryan Stoianowski. That was followed with a pass from Stoianowski to Stoianowski, brother to brother for a 21-yard catch.

"In two plays they moved the ball 34 yards," Gall said.

In the second half Gall's team had trouble handling a new offense. Clinton ran a single wing offense where they snapped the ball to their back Ryan Stoianowski.

"He carried every time and had four first downs on that drive," Gall said.

Manchester scored again with ten seconds left in the 4th quarter to pull within 5. Two series later Clinton scored again after a long drive that ate up the clock.

"We got the ball back with five minutes and needing two scores," Gall said. "We didn't have enough time."

Offensively the Flying Dutchmen had some pretty good statistics. Breilein completed 8 of 15 passes for 93 yards and a touchdown.

Punches made both extra points keeping his consecutive streak going.

Derick Hanewald carried 6 times for 80 yards and a touchdown. Evan Wahl carried 6 times for 46 yards before tearing a muscle.

"We're hoping he only misses one week," Gall said.

Gall said he didn't feel that the team played like they had the week before during scrimmages at Tecumseh.

"We had enthusiasm but we didn't have intensity," Gall said. "We didn't come off the ball."

Gall intends to work on the offensive and defensive lines this week.

Junior varsity team fares well in season opener

Team dumps Clinton in 28-0 shutout, coach anticipates further improvement

By Colleen O'Neill

Special Writer

Manchester Junior Varsity football opened the season with a 28-0 shutout of Clinton.

"A win against Clinton is a good way to get started," Head Coach Jim Fielder said. "But we definitely have some things to work on, which we will."

In the second quarter Josh McCalla, completed an 18-yard touchdown pass to Jacob Sawyer. The same combo also completed the two-point conversion.

Third quarter scoring was done by Alex Kormendi. First he ran in a 4-yard touchdown. A missed extra point kept the score to 14-0. Then Kormendi ran in a 2-yard touchdown and Jeremy Forner ran in the two point conversion to bring the score to 22-0.

Shane Amburgey ran in a 2-yard touchdown in the fourth quarter but the two-point conversion attempt failed.

"We go for the two point conversion a lot because we haven't got a kicking game and if we are 50% successful it is the same as getting all kicks," Fielder said.

The leading rusher was Alex Kormendi with 13 carries for 78 yards and two touchdowns. Josh McCalla completed 4 of 6 passes for 53 yards including one touchdown.

Defense was solid.

Nathan Vonbroda recovered one fumble. Ryan Maggetti had 3 sacks. Alex Kormendi had an interception. Russ Cruz blocked a punt, and Brent Leverett had an interception

Football pundits like to say special teams and turnovers win games. This JV squad seemed to prove that true.

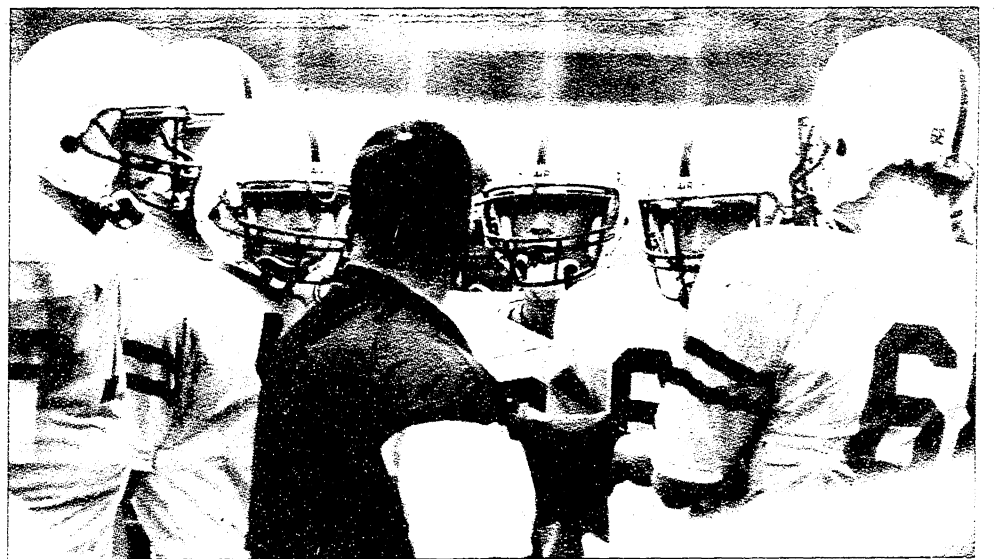

"We played defense when we had to," Fielder said. "Our first quarter was not that good but we got progressively better each quarter."

Fielder intends to work on some of things he saw last week. "Basically our goal is to improve every week," Fielder said.

Golf squad gets off to slow start at invitationals

By Colleen O'Neill

Special Writer

The Manchester Golf team has been busy.

The team, who just started practice on August 16, has already attended two Invitationals and a Jamboree.

Twenty players came out for the team. "I don't cut players," said Head Coach Dan Galaska. "The only difference is the kids who don't have a lot of experience won't get a lot of playing time but they will get some experience."

For varsity meets Galaska usually takes the top four and then rotates other players into the rotation.

"No one is saying you can never make varsity, as a kid gets better they can move up into varsity level," Galaska said.

Galaska would like to see more summer action from his players.

"We're going to strive to get our kids to play in summer," Galaska said. "These last two years I've seen a change in the kids coming out, they want to play more golf."

Galaska takes the better players to represent the team partly because the season is short to begin with. Golf ends by the first week of October usually because of weather.

"Our main thing to do this year is to develop all the players, but especially the younger players, because we have such a young team," Galaska said. We have one senior, five juniors, five sophomores, and nine freshmen."

On August 19 the Flying Dutchmen opened the season with the fifth annual Manchester Invitational.

19 teams participated and Columbia Central won it for the third straight year. Their total team score was 148 led by Brandon Badge who shot a 74.

The second place trophy went to Ann Arbor Greenhills with a 321 and third to Pinckney with 333.

Rob Lee of East Jackson and Jonathan Brinker from Ypsi-Lincoln both shot a 72. Lee won the playoff to take the first place individual medal. Brinker took second and Badge took third. Fourth place went to Jesse Dixon from Ann Arbor Greenhills who shot a 75 and fifth was won in a playoff by Dan Shirkey from Columbia Central who had a 78.

Manchester finished 17th with a total of 389.

"This was our best invitational score in the five years of this tournament," Galaska said. "With the young players we have there is a bright spot coming up."

Manchester had two teams at the invitational. The A Team was made up of senior Justin Preston, juniors Brett Maki and Matt Blair, freshmen Jeff Galaska, Nate Smith and Kevin Walter.

B Team had four players, junior Ryan Kee, sophomores Mike Walter and Chad Roberts and freshman, Nick Strobl.

The golfers then went on to their first Conference Jamboree hosted by Addison at the Lake LeAnn Golf Course on August 23.

Cross Country team young but ambitious

By Colleen O'Neill
 Special Writer

Five years ago Boys Cross Country was resurrected at Manchester High School and Girls Cross Country was born.

"I came here to do my student teaching in 1994 and some of the kids asked if I would help get a team started," said Head Coach Craig Vitale. "Eventually the board approved the position and I was hired the day before the 1995 season opened."

Vitale has been the head coach for both girls and boys cross country ever since. But he hasn't done it without help.

"John Leonard has been our volunteer assistant every step of the way," Vitale said. "He is a big part of the team."

This year the girl's team has ten runners but the boy's team only has three. Cross country is a team sport according to Vitale. The team score is calculated based on the placement of the top five runners.

"We need runners," Vitale said. "Any available runner has the opportunity to earn a varsity letter, get in shape and have some fun."

By contrast, the girl's team has a pretty solid nucleus. Four girls have been running together for three years said Vitale. Last year the girls had a 6-1 season and qualified for the state meet.

To begin training for the season Vitale took three boys and six girls to the Hojokanama Cross Country Camp in Hillsdale.

"We had six days of aerobic conditioning more than anything else," Vitale said.

Vitale said the runners were broken into groups based on a number of conditions such as ability and age.

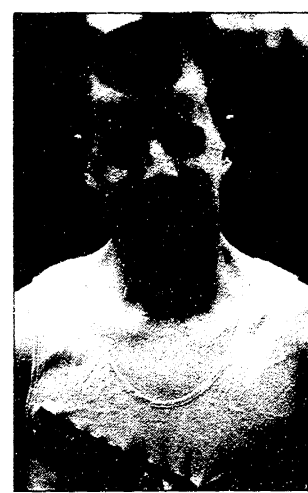

Senior Kyle Harris went into the top boys group.

"Those boys go farther and faster than anyone else," Vitale said. "There were probably 45-50 guys there and he was clearly the best runner there."

"He ran 70 miles in the 6 days we were there at camp," Vitale said.

GOLF

"We came in sixth out of six teams," Galaska said. "We have one of the tougher conferences in Class C as far as the state goes."

The top four golfers were Jeff Galaska and Chris Loud each with a 47, Matt Blair 49, and Brett Maki 51.

There are six teams in the conference; all six teams attend every jamboree.

Teams are awarded points based on their finish at a jamboree. First place team gets six points. Second place gets five points and so on in descending order. The total points from the six jamborees count 50% toward the conference championship.

A conference championship playoff will be held on October 6 at a neutral site. For the first time the 1999 playoff will be held at the Cascades Golf Course.

The team score from the conference championship will make up the other 50% of the total championship score.

On Saturday, August 26 the golfers attended the 16th Annual Blissfield Invitational.

Of the 20 teams in attendance Manchester finished 15th.

Galaska explained that the Blissfield format is a 2-man best ball event. Each school brings 6 players for a total of three teams. Both players on each team keep their score but only the best of the two scores at each hole is counted toward the team score. The three-team scores are added together for the team total.

"The 249 was our third best team score in the 16 year history of attending this invitational," Galaska said.

The 249 score was made up of team scores of 77, 78 and 94.

"If we had a better third team score we might have been 5th," Galaska said.

"We were really encouraged by that, especially with this young team, we see some really good teams ahead of us."

The only match this week is Thursday at Clinton. Play starts at 4 p.m.

"From the start of the season, having the best score ever at our own invitational was a good sign," Galaska said. "Our freshman class coming in has a lot of kids who played a lot during the summer, that will help. Sophomore class is pretty strong."

"The main thing is that the kids play a lot in the summer, we're seeing good signs of that now," Galaska said.

Galaska said the team is in their second year at Reddeman Farms.

"They allow the kids to play free after 7 p.m.," Galaska said. "They treat the kids very good there."

Dan Galaska is in his 5th year of coaching golf at Manchester. He was golf pro in Oklahoma, Oregon, Indiana, and Michigan. He played college golf at Ferris State.

The best part of coaching this year is having a late dinner with his son Jeff.

"We both get home late," Galaska said. "It is nice to be able to watch him play and not eat dinner alone."

"Really all of them are a good group of kids," Galaska said.

Doing your homework is key to successful fishing

"There are no sizable walleyes in this lake."

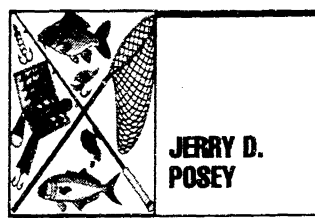

This statement was heard several times during the weekend that my brother and I spent fishing one of the larger inland lakes in the Traverse City area last summer.

Well, this may describe the luck those fellows had. But Pete and I are going back to the same spot again this year, and probably the following year and the one after that.

When we left, after six days of heavy fishing, we had pulled in enough to provide at least one good meal of fillets every day and we each brought home the five we were allowed to possess on the trip home.

I'm not claiming that everything we caught was a specimen that should be mounted and hung over the fireplace, but the smallest fish we kept was over 22 inches long and those are what I call sizable eatin' fish.

Walleyes are a finicky fish and if conditions are not just right they will not bite.

Many times I've observed a group of so-called walleye fishermen, as they unloaded their boat. Then they piled in and began what looked to me like a clumsy attempt to find the lake's walleye hot spot with a minimum amount of effort.

First, they race to a spot that looks good to them, and proceed to zig-zag back and forth at a speed most fishermen would feel is way too fast. If nothing of great size shows up on the sonar screen they quickly move to another likely looking area and repeat their zig-zag pattern.

After a half dozen half hearted attempts, they return to the landing, load up and probably head to the next sure-to-be-barren lake.

Meanwhile, some of us are slowly, but surely, pulling in an occasional keeper.

A little research may have told these guys that it might be the spawning season and the blips on the screen were not going to happen over the deep water until the breeders return from the shallower areas or the creek and stream inlets where most of the spawning is done.

Later in the summer few of the larger walleyes will be found in the shallower water. They seem to stay in the deeper water or in areas with underwater ledges and sandbars, where the bait fish may hang out.

A little time spent in the local bait shop or neighborhood bar will often produce information from other fishermen that may be of help when fishing a new lake, but two points should be kept in mind when gathering information in this way.

First, listen closely, get the details. Don't just hear the numbers and sizes when the other fellows talk. Listen for the type of bait that was used, the depth they were fishing, the time of day, and anything else that may be helpful to you when you get back on the lake.

Secondly, don't believe everything you hear. I'm not saying that fishermen tell the truth less often than that other type of person.

Meanwhile, back on the water.

When fishing for walleyes with live bait the secret is to make sure the bait is alive. The finicky walleye will pass up four or five dead, or non-moving minnows or leeches, and grab one that seemed to be wiggling around tempting the big guy to grab hold of him.

Anyone who has been fishing for walleyes for any length of time, knows how to place the hook in the minnow or leech without killing it. But some fishermen just don't take the time to do it correctly.

When hooking up a live nightcrawler, care should also be taken to get it securely fastened without poking it so full of holes that it is dead before it hits the water.

Whether trolling or still fishing, keep in mind when you take one nice sized walleye in a spot, there are probably several more just like him in the immediate area. Walleyes tend to cruise the lakes in groups and often the large ones seem to hang out with others of the same size. The key to success may be getting your line back into the same spot for another one before they move on.

When fishing in areas where the bottoms are covered with vegetation, try to stay just above the weed growth, where the walleye can find your offering as he cruises past. If the bait is just dangling in 12 inches of bottom grass, your odds of taking the lunker of the day are slim.

Bait casting will often coax a lazy walleye to bite when nothing else seems to get results. If the right lure is dragged past his nose, even a fish with a full stomach may grab it. That is the kind of temperament that has caused many a nice walleye to end up in the live-well at the days end.

Not all areas of a given lake produce good walleye fishing. The fish have certain areas they prefer to hang out in and once the fisherman has determined where they are, he's accomplished half of the game. Now all he has to do is figure out what it takes to get them to bite.

Remember, you gotta find 'em before you can keep 'em.

SCHIEL

Schiel said that many of the farmers have been able to survive because of the government programs that help subsidize small farms. But ironically, Schiel said that his farm is so small, it doesn't qualify for the government programs.

"Most of the programs, you need to have 200 or 300 acres," he said. "We only have 150, so we can't get in."

"Government programs don't apply to smaller acreage farms," he said. "There was one that did, I guess they quit offering it."

Schiel said it's just one more thing working against the farmers.

In addition to the weather, and the price of chemicals and equipment, the commodities markets also determine the bottom line for farmers each year.

"THIS YEAR was the best year for corn that we've had since we inherited it," he said. "And every day, as it's getting closer to harvest, I'm looking at corn prices and they're going down, down, down."

Schiel said that in order to support the farm, he and his family members all have jobs outside of farming. Schiel works at Frank's Pizza in town, and as a fallback position, he has begun taking culinary arts classes.

I'm going to pursue that and pray that farming pays off one of these years," he said.

The family also operates a small seed dealership on the side, as a way to make extra income.

"Every day, as it's getting closer to harvest, I'm looking at corn prices and they're going down, down, down."

— John Schiel
Bridgewater farmer

Schiel said that while farming is one of the hardest ways to make a living, he still wouldn't be able to discourage someone who wanted to give it a shot.

"I guess my first instinct would be to tell them 'you're nuts,' but I probably wouldn't do that. I've been around it so long that it's something you do automatically. You just know after a while, the corn needs to be in by this date.

"I WOULD tell someone to sit down and really think about it before you spent the money - and remember bigger isn't always better. Just because the neighbor up the road buys a 12-row corn planter, maybe your four-row planter still works fine - and it's cheaper. Watch your costs.

"If you don't enjoy what you doing, it's not worth it. I do enjoy it.

"It's so peaceful, you'd think that listening to a motor on a tractor running for hours and hours it wouldn't be. But after you listen to phones ringing all day, people arguing in town, it's nice to get home and sit on a tractor seat - that's relaxing.

"You get off into the back fields there, you see the deer running, the squirrels, you watch the sun come up and set. It's really breathtaking."

FOOTBALL

"One of the biggest differences in the game was that Clinton kids came off the ball and stayed low. We came off our blocks early," Gall said. "We were only one or two steps away from a big play."

Losing the first game to a non-conference opponent does not take the sting out of the loss.

"This is like losing a backyard game to your brother," Gall said. "We'll take a year of grief for this game as cousins meet cousins around the kitchen table."

The defense had a lot of opportunities because Clinton ran the ball so much.

Gall said that Schaible had a pretty good night with two knocked down passes and four solo tackles.

Pat DuRussel was involved in 13 tackles, two solo tackles and he knocked down a pass.

"However it is an unfortunate thing when the defensive backs are leading you in solo tackles," Gall said.

"These should happen at the line of scrimmage."

Manchester now has to prepare to play Michigan Center next week.

Even though Michigan Center struggled in a 27-0 loss to Parma Jackson County Western, Manchester has to reestablish the running game said Gall.

"If they are worried about the run, our quarterback can step back without people crawling all over him," Gall said.

"We have to make connections."

Gall feels that the thing that hurt the team the most was fumbles.

"The ball was on the ground way too much for Manchester," Gall said. "You can't have drives stopped by a fumble, you've got to put the ball away."

There were other breakdowns too. Injuries caused Gall to go to his fourth string long snapper.

"He just doesn't get the snaps in practice and he put the ball over Panches' head," Gall said.

The team also had problems with cramps. Manchester starts a lot of players on both sides of the ball and they just didn't get enough of a break to replenish the loss of fluids, according to Gall.

"That's not a good excuse," Gall said. "We just weren't in the condition they were."

The goal of the Manchester football team remains the same. Win the conference and qualify for post-season play.

"We've got a lot of things ahead of us," Gall said.

Bring on the conference.

SCHOOL

be a lot of fun.

Tia knows that her new teacher will be Mrs. Hankamp. She also thinks that a bus trip will be too long, so her mom is going to take her to school, but she has ridden on one during kindergarten round up.

"And one of my friends, Taylor Gross, is going to be in the same class with me," she said excitedly.

Tia turned five on May 14, and knows all her letters. She says that she can sing her ABC's "sometimes" but she would rather sing along with the Backstreet Boys. She can also spell her name.

"T-I-A, I supposed" she said.

Reading books are another part of school to which Tia is really looking forward. She likes to have people read to her, especially library books. Her favorite book is about a turtle and a spider.

What does she expect will happen on her first day?

"We will just read books and make cookie friends."

And that will suit Tia just fine.

IT'S SERENELY QUIET at Klager school on the afternoon of Aug. 25. There are less than 40 students in the entire building - just the afternoon kindergarten classes are in session. Classical music is playing in Mrs. Hankamp's room and the kindergartners are peacefully drawing as part of their "journal time."

They've just finished listening to a book called, "Your Crayons are Talking" and now they are making their own crayons tell beautiful stories. Tia is contentedly sitting at a double desk with a little boy.

She arrived at school about an hour earlier with her mom while her fifth grade brother, Clay, manned the video camera. Skipping along the sidewalk in her pretty white dress, she was eager to find her friend Taylor and pose for photos and a couple minutes of video footage.

The afternoon had a much quieter beginning than the morning classes did, when hundreds of Klager Kids crowded into the large gym. Once the morning buses left the circle drive, the afternoon kindergarten buses entered.

Mothers who had put their kindergartners on the bus minutes before at home, were now at the school to greet them - taking pictures and videos, and wiping away a tear or two from their eyes.

Seeing your baby go off to school is not easy, no matter how many children have preceded her.

"Well, I'm surprised I haven't cried," said Joan Harvey. "She still hasn't let me go to school with her."

"I would really like to see what she's doing at school but I know she's doing well."

Tia rode the bus to school Thursday for the first time. The ride is even longer than the hour the family had been promised, but she liked it anyway and wanted to ride again on Friday.

Joan Harvey admits, "The house feels pretty empty. I'm getting some work done, but we're still kind of feeling it out."

Tia's reaction to her first week of school was "very good."

She enjoyed reading two or three books each day, and playing with toys. Froggy is a fun friend in her class but she knows he is "just a big beanie baby."

"And a little boy made fun of me today," she said with another giggle.

Asked if she would decide to keep going to school all year, she said, "Do I have to?" She thought it might be fun to pretend to be four and go back to preschool, but changed her mind after a few minutes' reflection.

Kindergarten, it seems, is quite a lot more fun.

Dan's River Grill open for business

By Marsha Johnson Chartrand
Special Writer

At the end of week two at Dan's River Grill, the consensus is good.

Dan and Carol Huntsbarger are both pleased with the reception that their new restaurant is receiving, both from local residents and from out of town clientele.

"We're surprised with the draw we are already seeing from Ann Arbor, Chelsea and Saline people," said Carol Huntsbarger. "Many of our regular [Moveable] Feast clients have also made their way out here to visit."

Manchester diners have also lent their support to the new eatery. The class of 1974 held their 25th high school reunion in the basement last weekend. The basement, too, has been the recipient of a brightened face-lift, as has the regular dining room at street level.

An upscale menu and a fresh new look have been part of the changes since April. Plans for this fall include regular events at the lower level including entertainment, beer and wine tasting, and more.

"WE ALREADY have a lot of people calling who want to play out here," said Huntsbarger. "The response has way exceeded our expectations."

Huntsbarger enjoys being busy and thrives on the constant activity. But, she admits, "I could use about a week's worth of sleep." While overseeing the operations of their new venture, she also wants to create a good work environment.

"I want people to enjoy coming into work each day. I know we can do it - but it might take a little time."

On Friday night, the restaurant served over 250 people very smoothly. As the two-week period has passed, the staff has eased into their new roles quickly and things are going very well. With each passing day, everyone can feel things coming together better.

THE OVERWHELMING part is over. Now they can settle in and enjoy the fruits of the hard work they have experienced over the past four months.

"After the first week, everyone mellowed out a bit. The service is progressively faster and especially at lunch times we are able to move tables very efficiently," said Dan Huntsbarger. "People aren't used to waiting an hour for a table in Manchester, but so far that has happened mostly on weekends. Our weekday traffic has been pretty manageable."

Dining room manager Lisa Hebert is an experienced assistant and someone on whom the Huntsbargers can rely as they work out their own kinks of owning and managing two restaurants. Hebert has worked with Dan at Gandy Dancer and Moveable Feast prior to coming to Dan's River Grill, and brings several years of experience to her new position.

HIGH EXPECTATIONS - from the management and the customers - are part of the package at the Grill. Hebert observes that there have been a few issues during the first two weeks, but that each has been dealt with effectively.

While serving the needs of their widely varied clientele, Dan's River Grill has received great feedback and plenty of suggestions, both from local and out of town customers, many of which they've already been able to accommodate.

"I'd like to be something for everyone, but that just isn't possible," says Dan. "But all in all, I'm very pleased."

He is content with his success. After all, it's his name on the sign.

New Manchester restaurant Dan's River Grill opened for business recently after an extensive remodeling.

this. I thought I was training for it by running on the treadmill before I left, but I was totally unprepared for what I found on the trail. Now that I'm through with it, I feel like I am in good condition."

DURUSSEL'S THREE children and other family members met him several times along the trail: in Adkins VA, in Washington D.C., then he hiked with his son, Damian, for a week - from Dalton MA to Manchester Center, VT; a total of about 80 miles. Finally, when he reached the base of Mt. Katahdin, Maine, all three children - Heather, Charles and Damian - plus his youngest brother, Jim, climbed up the last mountain along side him, to share in his victorious ending.

Hikers on the trail use a series of maps and guidebooks. One data book tells you how far each shelter is, where there's water available, if there's a motel close by the trail, and what sights may be seen nearby. It was also important to find out about available mail drops, as DuRussel would mail additional food to him along the trail.

For each of his 18 mail drops, DuRussel had to get to town before Saturday afternoon, to pick up mail at the General Delivery station of the local post office, in order to move along.

GETTING TO town was a feat in itself, but DuRussel and other hikers have found that people along the way are not only friendly, they will go out of their way to help those souls who are hiking the Appalachian Trail.

"If you have a backpack, you can almost always hitch a ride," he said. "Without it, people might not bother; but if they know you're walking the trail, they will bend over backwards to help you."

Folks known as "Trail Angels" might be stopped along the way to serve food or drinks to hikers or hand them money. Quite often, these people are former trail hikers themselves.

"Anyone who has hiked it before, you meet them and they are like family - you can relate to them easily, they know what it's like," says DuRussel. So these people don't mind providing a little bit of "Trail Magic" along the way. It's a way to pay back someone who might have offered a favor to them long ago.

"THEN YOU'D meet people who'd ask you all kinds of questions about everything. They think you're some kind of god because you're walking the trail. A lot of times they would try and offer me money. I'd try to tell them I'm fine, but they were so intrigued they wanted to offer me something."

The trail wasn't without its hazards.

"I got to Virginia and got very depressed; I just didn't feel like doing it any more. Then I met up with two guys, who really motivated me. One told me, 'you ask yourself if you want the picture.' The picture is the one on top of Mt. Katahdin, in front of the sign. It's a tradition for hikers to get their picture taken there when they finish the trail."

"I wanted to get a thousand miles, which is approximately at the half way point. It's a long walk, once you get half way you want to keep going. Miles start flying by, and you just keep going. Finally, you figure out it's a series of week long hikes, that turn out to be the whole thing."

When he got to the halfway point, he knew he would finish. THEN THERE were the bears.

"One day I was walking with another guy and we saw two huge black bears just about 20 feet away. Well, people had told us all you have to do if you see a bear, is rap your walking sticks together.

"They were wrong."

Fortunately, the bears left without incident but it was another reminder of human vulnerability along the 2,000-mile trail.

"My pack weighed about 50 pounds when it was full of food & water. I had one change of clothes. I cooked every night on a cook stove. I ate bagels, peanut butter, Lipton dinners, Ramen noodles, and lots of Snickers bars. It didn't matter how much you ate because you'd walk it off the next day anyway."

"At each food drop, Damian would send so much money. They figure it costs about a dollar a mile, maybe I spent a little bit more. There are hostels along the way, basically they're just bunkhouses, where you pay $6 to sleep on a bunk. Some people have a high comfort threshold, and would spend weekends in a hotel in town. That could get expensive."

BEING BASICALLY alone on the trail, DuRussel still found he needed a lot of social interaction.

"Every once in a while I just had to see people. So I would go into town for a bit. For two weeks I hiked alone, and that's when I got real depressed."

"One guy I hiked with until June, and then didn't see him 'til the last day."

All in all, the trip was a life-changing experience for DuRussel.

"You realize what you really need in life. You don't need all those things you think you do - the big house, a big backyard."

"While you're on the trail, you have a lot of time to think, you realize that everything you always wanted, are the things you don't need. Huge houses, or a fancy car, don't mean much. You learn to get by with less."

What's next for Donald DuRussel? "I was thinking about doing a bike route, coast to coast. I don't know; a lot of people tell me that next year at about the same time, I'll get the urge to go in the woods again. Maybe I will."

EDITORIAL

Substance policy an improvement

Village should keep enforcing sign law

The Village of Manchester has recently begun enforcing an old ordinance that prohibits people and businesses from placing signs in public areas like road sides.

Until recently, the ordinance that prohibited people from advertising garage sales, homes for sale, Beanie Babies and Metabolife was loosely enforced.

But recent complaints by businesses and residents prompted the village to investigate the ordinance code on signs, and it was discovered that a large percentage of the signs proliferating on public land were illegal.

The village ordinance prohibits temporary advertising signs on property other than where the event is taking place. For example, residents holding garage sales can advertise the sale in their own yard, but not at the street corner.

Some exceptions are allowed, for instance, real estate agencies can advertise an open house on the day of the event. But for the most part, the signs that were appearing on street corners and road sides are now being removed.

The Village Council is currently in the process of updating its ordinance code and determining whether the ban on signs will stand.

THE BAN should stay in effect. In fact, it should be expanded to tie up some of the loose ends, like real estate signs, for instance. Without an effective way of keeping the signs under control, they could become an unruly mess, creeping out closer and closer to the road, obstructing driver vision and creating a dangerous driving atmosphere.

Moreover, they are just plain clutter. Often times, after the event was concluded, the person who planted the sign would simply forget about it, leaving it there for months, or until someone else took it down.

The current ordinance is an effective tool for keeping our community uncluttered and safe.

We hope the council finds a way to keep the ban on signs in effect while it updates its ordinance manual. The ordinance should be sensible, easy to read and enforceable.

While the Enterprise does not believe it makes sense to allow people to litter the public areas with signs advertising garage sales and other events, it does make sense to have a location in the community where these items can be posted.

One idea the council should investigate is whether there is a centrally-located area where these events can be posted, a sort of community billboard.

This way, people could advertise garage sales, cars for sale, homes for sale, babysitting services, gatherings and any other type of events pertinent to the community free of charge.

OF COURSE the difficulty would be in finding such a location. But if the village can locate an area where this type of free advertising would be appropriate, without resorting to utility poles or the side of the road, everyone would benefit.

The person advertising the event or service would benefit by having to post the sign in only one location, and the potential consumers would benefit by only having to travel to one location to learn about all of the garage sales, etc., taking place on a particular weekend.

One unfortunate aside to this debate is that political signs advertising candidates are governed by state law, and do not come under the jurisdiction of the ordinance code of Manchester. Therefore, politicians will still be allowed to place signs in public areas, like road sides.

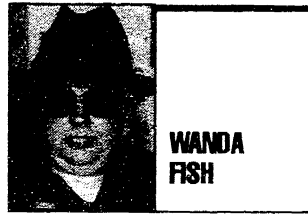

It is hypocritical that the same politicians forbidding private individuals from planting signs by the side of the road will take full advantage of the loophole themselves when election time rolls around. Perhaps come November, the elected officials will remember this debate and restrain themselves from cluttering up our beautiful community.

Last week, the Enterprise ran an editorial about the proposed revisions to the Manchester schools policy on drug, alcohol and tobacco use, possession or attempted purchase by students. The changed policy would apply year around, on and off school property, and would suspend the student from extracurricular activities of any kind. It also provides for mandatory counseling. The editorial board stated that "they cannot support this policy in its current form. The policy is an inadequate response to a very serious problem."

I have several problems with the editorial board's statement. First, this is NOT a new policy. It is a revision of an old policy that did not work and that drew the ire of many members of the community for its inadequacy. Some of issues raised about the proposal should be explored in the public hearing - but where are the suggestions as to how to change the proposal to make it better? The community has been howling that we need some get tough, get serious policies regarding the kids of the hood. Okay, let's make it clear, said the School Board, you do drugs, alcohol, tobacco, this is your punishment - you can't be a cheerleader, a golfer, and so on. And, we're not going to cut you any slack about where and when this took place. That's a pretty clear policy, easily understood. It is apparently very similar to the policies of Saline and Chelsea, neighboring school districts where the kids will have the most interactions with peers. In short, a unified approach to dealing with very real problems in schools.

Let's look carefully at the Enterprise's complaints: should distinguish between levels of the offense - set one punishment for tobacco, one for crack, one for coke, another for vodka, a lesser standard for beer? What about inhaling? What about barfing? As in, yeah, I had three beers, but then I threw up so it doesn't count? Just where do you want to take this? Zero is pretty easy to understand. Okay, another objection.

WANDA FISH

FISH BAIT

Extracurricular activities are good for children and may help prevent substance abuse by keeping the kids involved, and besides the substance abusers probably aren't involved in extracurricular activities anyway. Valid issues, but what does the Enterprise suggest instead. Wes Gall's point was that the kids would not be banned altogether - they just can't represent the school in events. How about we paint them green instead of taking away privileges? Or put a big red A on their clothes - for Abuser. Or maybe make them wear a stupid hat?

The Enterprise states that "Another concern is that the school system, by enacting a policy of this nature, seems in some ways to be acting as surrogate parents." What does that mean? By the very nature of education, schools dealing with children younger than 18 are acting as parents. They have for years. If they didn't, would parents have to attend school along with their children to set brakes on kids' dangerous and disruptive activities? Or does the Enterprise recommend we set no rules at all and simply invite total chaos into the classrooms?

A parent always has the right to homeschool the child or to send the child to a non-public school. The proposed policy will involve parents in counseling. Ah yes, is it legal? And of course the ACLU is objecting somewhere on some basis. They always are. And I happen to cheer that role, but let's not anoint the lawyers by suggesting that any lawsuit explicit or implied should be a reason to crumble and cringe from doing what is right. Is it legal to not set and uphold some clear standards of behavior for our school children? The children who are at the school to learn and benefit have rights too - to an environment that promotes learning. Do you folks recall some of the class action lawsuits against some schools in the nation that were turning out "graduates" who could not read, write or do the simplest math?

The Enterprise raises concerns about how the policy might work - the criteria for val-with a glass of iced tea to wash it down.

AS I CASUALLY ate my meal, I flipped over the tab. Twenty-five dollars? I looked around and questioned the waitress about whether I got the wrong bill. No, she said, it's just that food prices have climbed so much in the last decade. "We have to keep in step with inflation," she sighed, and went about her task of serving other patrons.

As I looked around, I noticed someone I thought I knew. Could that be Gary Blades, the township supervisor. I finished my meal, grabbed an extra glass of iced tea and approached his table.

"Gary?" He looked up. "Mike?" he questioned as I sat down.

He looked terrible. The bags under his eyes looked like fleshy buckets. His hair was snow white. He reached and shook my hand half-heartedly.

"What's going on?" began my dialogue as I described what I had just seen. He made his wry chuckle and smiled.

"I GUESS you mean all the building," he volunteered. "Well, it began 10 years ago." For 15 minutes he regaled me with an encapsulated history of Sharon Township since 1999. By the time he was done, a lot of answers had been supplied, but several questions also remained.

It seems that the proposed trailer park in the northern part of the township helped release the flood gates of development in the township. When

A look at Sharon Township in 2010

By M. S. Clinansmith
Special Writer

This morning I woke up in a cold sweat. Nightmares can be scary, but last night's was based upon fact and incidents I had already lived. To relieve them gave me a start. I sat bolt upright in bed. The clock read 4:30 a.m. After a few moments, I rolled over and gradually returned to a more restful sleep.

As I remembered it, my nightmare involved the history of the past decade in Sharon Township. Since the millennium, some things have transpired which have sent shock waves across the once vast fields and caused deep concern among all residents, not only me. I thought I had better catalogue what I remembered from my nightmare.

As my dream began, I was standing in Lyndon Uphaus' field which rings my house on three sides. The corn stalks were over eight feet tall and it appeared to be August or September or sometime just about harvest.

I HEARD the tractors and the plunk, plunk, plunk of the harvester loading the mature ears into the trailing wagons. As I walked toward the sound, I met the work crew hard at work but visibly distressed.

"What's the problem?" I asked. One of the harvest crew stepped forth and told me that Uphaus had told them that he did not intend to continue farming into next year. "It's too costly!" he said.

Suddenly, I found myself in the middle of the same field the following April. A few corn stalk remains poked above the soil level. They were remnants of the previous year's harvest. In the distance, I heard the roar of a diesel engine. First one then another broke the spring silence. As I turned to face the noise, a long trail of trucks appeared carrying lumber and bricks, concrete and other building supplies.

Several backhoes and dump trucks were idling nearby. As I watched in astonishment, the backhoes loaded the trucks, which carted away the excess soil.

THE WORKMEN, arriving by bus, picked up their tools and began to build. Within minutes, first one house, then another was finished before my eyes.

As I talked to the foreman, who was the same foreman of the harvest crew I had talked to earlier, told me that building was on schedule. The subdivision would be finished in 30 minutes.

Thirty minutes. As I looked around, the workmen were putting the finishing touches on the last house. They were all carbon copies of each other and they stretched from Pleasant Lake Road to the north to Bethel Church Road in the south.

I turned around. Across the street and surrounding the dilapidated remains of the Michigan Livestock Exchange on three sides was another subdivision.

"We finished that last week," the foreman volunteered. "I am hurrying to finish this project so we can move on to the next."

HE INFORMED me that the site for that project was the barren fields bordered by M-52 on the east, Pleasant Lake Road on the south and Smyth Road on the west.

My thoughts rushed in on me. How could this happen? Hadn't anybody foreseen this? I decided to check out the other developments.

As I approached M-52 the mounting crescendo of traffic noise assaulted me. Beyond my wilting lilac bushes the same two-lane highway now noted the passage of twice as many cars as ten years ago. Twenty-five thousand cars a day...on one northbound and one southbound lane. I did not dare cross it on foot as I so often did. Instead, I jumped into my car, waited my turn to slip into traffic and traveled the two hundred yards to the driveway of the former MLE. The parking lot was vacant except for those having their meals at Kim's.

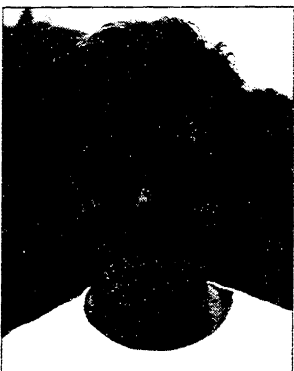

I sat down and ordered the special, meat loaf, mashed potatoes and gravy and green beans

Street Talk

What is your opinion of the village ordinance that governs where private citizens can put signs - for garage sales, homes for sale, etc., and prevents them from using public easements for directional signs?

By Marsha Johnson-Chartrand

"I was surprised to learn they had an ordinance; but I always thought it did look tacky to have so many signs on the corner. I've seen some of them sit there for as long as a month."
— Sharon Day

"I think they should be able to do it, but they should take them down when the sale is over with."
— Anne Lantis

"I was thinking of this as I drove through Saline earlier. There were signs all over the posts and at every corner. I just don't know. I'd be opposed to them being placed on utility poles, but I think they should be able to put them someplace besides their own yards."
— Yvonne Huber

"I think it's absurd."
— Leslie Rogers

"I don't really think it matters. It's OK with me, as long as they take their signs down again."
— Maggie Evilsizer

"I don't think it's good. You should be able to put some signs up. That's what garage sales are for, so people can come and pick up bargains. It should be OK to put up a sign on the street."
— Bridget Austin

Planning your estate properly is important

Many people are under the mistaken belief that estate planning is only for the "wealthy."

Yet with increases in the values of stock and bond portfolios, as well as appreciation of residential real estate, an ever-increasing percentage of the so-called "middle class" is beginning to realize that proper estate planning must be included as part of a well-constructed financial plan.

Most of us realize that proper estate planning is important for those who wish to ensure that their assets are disposed of according to their wishes upon death.

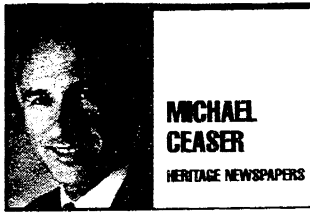

Many people do not realize, however, that proper estate planning is also important in order to reduce the expenses and delays of the probate process, as well as to reduce the impact of estate taxes.

The most basic component of an estate plan is a properly drawn will. Even if someone has not created their own will, state law determines how their property will be distributed upon their death.

So, in effect, everyone has a will (created by state statute), it just might not be the one they would have preferred.

Having a properly drawn will enables an individual to leave specific items of property to whomever they may choose, thus avoiding potential conflicts among family members.

Contrary to popular opinion,

MICHAEL CEASER
HERITAGE NEWSPAPERS

MONEY SENSE

having a will does not avoid probate. In most cases, the probate process can cause additional expenses and delays in the final disposition of the estate. It is therefore desirable to keep the probate process to a minimum, if possible.

One of the best ways to do this is through the creation of a revocable living trust. As the creator of their trust, an individual is named as their own trustee with successor trustees named who can take over handling of trust assets in the event of the death or incapacity of the person creating the trust.

The revocable living trust can keep assets out of the probate process, while also protecting the privacy of the individual and family members.

This is very different than a will, which is a public document, the contents of which are accessible to anyone who wishes it.

It is important to note that just creating a revocable living trust will not in itself reduce probate. Once the trust is created, assets must be retitled in the name of the trust.

Many people fail to follow through with the transfers after the trust is created, and effectively have wasted the money spent to establish the trust.

Taxpayers should compare the costs of probating their estate to the costs of establishing a revocable living trust on an individual basis. In some cases (especially smaller estates), the costs of establishing the trust could be greater than the costs of probate.

Avoiding or at least reducing estate taxes is another very important reason for estate planning. In 1999, $650,000 of one's assets are excluded from estate taxes. This amount will increase gradually to $1,000,000 by 2006.

For a married couple, estate taxes are not due on the death of the first spouse, therefore many people choose to own assets as joint tenants with the assets going to the surviving spouse upon the death of the first one.

For those estates that are subject to estate taxes, this can be a mistake because upon the second death, the entire estate is subject to estate tax.

For those whose estates are large enough to be subject to estate taxes, estate splitting through the creation of "A" and "B" trust arrangements may be desirable.

As the term suggests, this involves the splitting of the estate into two equal parts. In this way, each spouse can have an estate in 1999 of $650,000 for a total of $1,300,000 that will not be subject to estate tax.

Under the "A" and "B" trust arrangement, at the first death the surviving spouse has his or her assets in the "A" trust which is part of their estate.

The assets of the deceased spouse are in the "B" trust, which can be used by the surviving spouse but will not be included in their estate.

When a remarriage is involved, a third type of trust called a "QTIP" (qualified terminable interest property) trust may be used.

Under this arrangement the surviving spouse can receive income from the QTIP trust but he or she cannot control the ultimate disposition of the trust principal, which often will be paid to the children of the first spouse.

There are many other valuable estate planning tools such as durable power of attorney, gifts, living wills, direct transfers, charitable remainder trusts and various forms of ownership that can be useful in a comprehensive estate plan.

These and many other alternatives should be discussed with your estate planning "team." Professional advisors that you may wish to include on your estate planning team are your attorney, CPA, investment advisor or financial planner, bank trust officer and insurance agent.

Estate planning is a complex area that requires the expertise of many professionals and should never be a "do-it-yourself" proposition.

Michael Ceaser, a certified financial planner, and is a registered representative of Multi-Financial Securities Corp.

Planning commission updates zoning

According to Freedom Township Planning Commission Chair Stanley Tschlitz, the meeting on September 7 promises to be routine as the group continues to update the zoning ordinances.

"We're going through the ordinance to revise and upgrade sections that are should be clarified. Hopefully, we can deal with some issues that have been troublesome for people."

Asked about the Sprint application for a cellular telephone tower, Tschlitz said nothing had been heard from Sprint since Aug. 3 when company representatives did not appear at the public hearing.

"We sent them a letter shortly after the hearing, asking their intentions but still have heard nothing further. I rather think they've pulled back. My guess is the airport issue played a part in that."

The Freedom Township Planning Commission meets at 7:30 p.m. on the first Tuesday of each month at the Township Hall. The Hall is located at 11508 Pleasant Lake Road. The Planning Commission urges the public to attend the meetings.

the Landon Corporation could not get the state courts to reverse the decision of the Sharon Township Planning Commission, Board of Trustees and the Washtenaw County Planning Commission not to allow the 693-unit, 173-acre development to proceed, they took their request to the Michigan Manufactured Home Commission. After hearing only the Landon side of the case and refusing to recognize the potential damage to wetlands, etc., the MMHC decided to reverse the decision of the Supreme Court of Michigan.

AS A RESULT, the trailer park began the development deluge. Other development companies followed suit. The township's population tripled to almost 5,000 residents.

A tear came to Blades' eye as he choked on his next sentence. "I could have...we could have prevented this, but no one was willing to help." He told me that his health and attitude went downhill from that point. He told me how he was not able to mobilize support for his program, not even to get candidates to run for the township identating an accusation and making a judgment. That's a legitimate concern. As the saying goes, the deed is in the doing. Any policy, law, rules or ordinance may be complex to enforce, but we tend to muddle through and get it pretty right. Not perfect. We wrote a Constitution that has, at its base, the mechanisms for change, interpretation and execution. Surely Manchester can put into place a policy that, while not perfect from the get go, is an improvement. It can be changed as needed. And surely the Manchester Enterprises editorial board can make some positive suggestions.

I do agree with the editorial board's conclusion that the school board is headed in the right direction. Mostly, I appreciate the willingness to start a community dialogue about an important decision in the school system, a decision that will be aired in a public hearing before the policy is adopted. I hope we'll hear from the kids, the parents, the clergy and us plain citizens who think the future of our country rests with our youth.

board in the past two elections. But the developers did. They had their employees move into Sharon Township and run for every office as the sitting trustees, treasurer and secretary chose not to run again. They did not challenge Blades himself, but he told me that this term would be his last.

I did not want to pursue the matter any further. We paid our respective bills and exited Kim's. As I reached the outside, I shook Gary's hand and turned to walk to my car.

IN THE DISTANCE, I could see a crane lifting a sign. The golden arches! Oh, fine, I said to myself. That's all we need: another fast food place to contend with Wendy's and KFC. Across the street, my home suddenly disappeared and in its place stood a Ponderosa.

I awoke, shaking, and in a cold sweat.

'Street Cruisers' automobile show to be held in Clinton

The Southern Michigan Street Cruisers of Clinton will be holding their annual car show in conjunction with the Clinton Fall Festival on Sep. 25.

The Street Cruisers will be presenting more than 125 trophies for original and restored vehicles: cars, trucks and special interest. The event will take place at Tate Park, off US-12 on the west side of Clinton.

Registration for vehicle owners takes place from 9 a.m. to noon, and the event will proceed rain or shine.

The public is invited to see the vehicles on display. There will be shuttle buses to and from the festival to Tate Park.

All proceeds from the event are donated to children's charitable organizations. In the past, money has been given to the Special Days Camp for terminally ill children, Lenawee Riders for Handicapped Children, Associated Charities to provide clothing and Christmas baskets to children, and the Gift Giving Tree at Kmart and Walmart.

For more information about the event, please call (517) 456-7329, or (517) 431-2391.
