obstruction" to the detriment of both.

Green staff are hard enough to come by in the country, in clubs near cities it is an even more serious problem. Some have resorted to placing course upkeep in the hands of contractors. I have had experience of this. It is but natural that a firm under contract wish to get the job over as quickly as possible.

Neither farming, gardening or the care of a course can be done in a hurry. Whimsical as it may seem, a course or a links loses something when the personal touch, with its pride and intimate knowledge, is discarded.

Firemen stood by, ready to swill away poisonous and inflammable liquid, on Sunday, after a lorry carrying 19 tons of "Octel" ploughed through a wall on Mossley Road, Ashton-under-Lyme, and landed on its side on the golf course.

Play stopped on the sixth and seventh fairways of the golf course and the area was declared out of bounds for the rest of the day, because of possible dangers consequent upon the crash.

A suggestion that Lullingstone Golf Course be broken up into two nine-hole courses for the convenience of beginners appalled Mr Leslie Reeves at last week's meeting of the Estates Committee of Dartford Rural Council.

Mr Jones thought it would help beginners who found the full 18-holes too long, and also help ease congestion. By breaking the course into two nine-hole courses, more people could get round.
