BROWN PATCH

Brown patch commonly occurs during hot and humid weather of mid-summer. The pathogen (Rhizoctonia solani) can infect a variety of turfgrass species, but often is most severe on perennial ryegrass, tall fescue, and colonial bentgrass.

The disease may appear as brown, circular patches that range in size from 1 to several feet in diameter. When the disease is active, a characteristic smoke ring of infected tissue and fungal mycelium may be seen along the periphery of patches. Symptoms on individual leaf blades are generally tan and surrounded by a chocolate-brown band.

Symptoms can appear overnight when conditions favorable for the pathogen (>95% relative humidity for >8 hours) are present. The disease generally subsides with the onset of cooler temperatures."
