Snow mould

One, or a combination, of Microdochium nivale, Typhula incarnata, Typhula ishikariensis and Sclerotinia borealis, can cause Snow mould. They occur in areas of Northern and Central Europe where snow cover exists for certain periods of the year. Microdochium nivale causes pink snow mould, T. incarnata causes grey snow mould.

Snow cover prevents photosynthesis reducing the plants metabolism. The snow cover also encourages contact with the snow mould pathogens. Snow mould kills the grass plants by maceration of the tissue, leaching of the plants cytoplasm, depletion of carbohydrates and desiccation.
