DOLLAR SPOT

Dollar spot is perhaps one of the most common and devastating diseases of turfgrasses worldwide. The disease is caused by the pathogen Sclerotinia homoeocarpa and occurs on nearly all turfgrass species.

As the name sounds, dollar spot generally appears as small circular spots approximately the size of a silver dollar. Where the disease is severe, these infection centers may coalesce and form larger patches of blighted turf. White aerial mycelium often can be found on infested tissues during the morning hours, but the mycelium disappears as the leaves dry during the day.

Symptoms on individual leaf blades are hour-glass in shape. The light tan lesion is usually bordered by a thin, dark-brown band.

Environmental conditions favoring dollar spot are warm days and cool nights. Although the disease is most severe during the spring and fall, symptoms may occur over a larger period of the year.
