WILLOW

Common species include Crack willow, white willow, weeping willow, goat willow and Osier. There are nineteen species native to Britain.

Leaves are generally long and narrow, often finely toothed. White willow and osier bear silver hairs on lighter undersurface. Osier lacks the fine-teeth and edges of the leaf may be rolled inwards. On Crack willow the leaves are glossy and twisted.
Leaves are slightly broader in bay and Goat willow.

Flowers with yellow catkins (April).
Fruits are slender, white and fluffy.
Native willows are ecologically important, supporting numerous insect types including gall producers.

The bark of the willow is smooth in young stems, older trunks become fissured, heavily so in crack and white willow.
