Ken Quandt, Glencoe Country Club, is rebuilding #4 green and #17 tee. Also, plans have been completed to finish the fairway water system. — Mike Bavier, Calumet Country Club, says they have built a new cart shed and a new Pro shop, along with remodeling the clubhouse. — Flossmoor Country Club has built a new storage building and cart shed. — Peter Voykin, Idlewild Country Club, is doing well after a tonsillectomy. — Brother Andy Voykin is operating a driving range at Half Day Road and Milwaukee Avenue, along with the Flying Carpet operation. — The main irrigation lake has been dug out to a greater depth at Evanston Country Club. Bruce Sering says the fill will be used for 45,000 sq. ft. driving range tee, 6 practice target greens and Berms built to screen the range off from the golf course. — Bill Douglas has completed his first year at Penn State University. He will continue to work at Evanston Country Club. — Harold Frederickson, Edgewood Valley Country Club, has all redwood furniture around his tees including ball washer stands. — The George A. Davis Co. is happy to announce that Mr. Peter Nason has joined their staff as an irrigation specialist. — Oscar Miles, Olympia Fields Country Club, has rebuilt 4 tees on his north course.

Itasca Country club, one of several west suburban courses hampered by floods last year, has built a dike to keep the waters of Salt creek off its property. Golfers will have to clout the ball over the hazard to reach the 15th green, which—along with several other areas—has been elevated.

Elmhurst, also near the flood area, has rebuilt its 10th fairway and Medinah has improved the first and sixth greens on its famous No. 3 course.
