TOLERANCE OF DOLLAR SPOT (Sclerotinia homeocarpa) TO BENOMYL

During 1972, benomyl failed to give control of Sclerotinia dollar spot in several locations. The pathogen (Sclerotinia homeocarpa) isolated from control failure sites in Illinois, Ohio, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania has shown 100 times the tolerance to benomyl as isolates from other areas where no control difficulties exist.

Instead of relying upon one fungicide for the control of Sclerotinia dollar spot, it is better to alternate fungicides. This will decrease the probability of tolerant strains from occurring. The control of mist turf-grass diseases from year to year is best when at least two fungicides are used in alternate applications.
