Recycling Plastic Crop Protection Product Containers

A Program Of The Agricultural Container Research Council

The Agricultural Container Research Council (ACRC) supports state-level container collection programs, and works closely with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, state environmental regulatory agencies, and departments of agriculture and natural resources.

Where To Find Approved Collection Centers In Your Area

To find the location of the center nearest you, call any one of the following:

- Your state environmental regulatory agency
- The Agricultural Container Research Council Program Administrator at 202-682-4745
- The National Agricultural Chemicals Association at 202-296-1585
- The Alliance for a Clean Rural Environment at 800-545-5410

How To Obtain ACRC Program Information

For general information and educational materials, contact the ACRC at 202-682-4745.

For collection and program information, contact Rob Denny, ACRC Program Administrator, at 202-682-4745.

ACRC Collection Contractors

Collection contractors are hired by the ACRC to take ownership of approved containers at the collection site, grind them into flakes (usually on-site) and transport them to downstream recyclers or approved storage sites. ACRC collection contractors will accept only containers that are certified to be visually clean and properly rinsed.

The collection center's responsibilities end as soon as the properly rinsed containers have been turned over to the ACRC official contractor.
