

Roquemore's design community centerpiece

The newly opened Country Club of Woodloch Springs golf course is the centerpiece of a new residential community being developed as part of the nationally renowned Woodloch Pines resort located east of Scranton, Pa.

Woodloch Springs was designed by Rocky Roquemore.

The 6,600-yard, par 72 layout presents a different challenge on every hole. At the 14th, golfers must navigate 200-foot deep Hell's Gate Gorge with their approach to the green.

Other features include 13 bridges over natural wetlands, five miles of cart paths, 65 bunkers and a double green connecting two par threes.

"A major share of the credit for the success of the course should go to the owners who allowed us to spare no reasonable expense in order to take advantage of the natural features of the area," said Roquemore.

$10B Malaysian park to include eight golf courses

site near Singapore.

An Italian developer has brought together the Italian and Malaysian governments and private money to build the facility.

It is expected to eventually include 24 hotels with 1,000 rooms each.

Developers, who have been working on the project for the past 18 months, expect the park to draw 150,000 people a day.

The site is 200 meters high.

Much of the park will be built halfway up the hill — about 150 feet above the ocean — and builders will move about 50 million yards of dirt.

Much of that dirt will be used to form the golf courses.
