AGC's Arizona holdings reach double digits with Superstition Springs purchase

PHOENIX, Ariz. — American Golf Corp. acquired Superstition Springs Golf Club in Mesa in October, the third Phoenix-area acquisition for the California-based golf course management firm in as many weeks.

AGC bought Tatum Ranch Golf Club in Cave Creek and The Legend Golf Resort in Glendale in separate transactions, bringing the total number of courses owned in Arizona to 10.

According to Kevin Roberts, American Golf's senior vice president of operations for the West Coast, AGC has been monitoring the progress of the three Arizona resort courses for several years.

"It has always been our intention to expand our presence in the high-end, resort-type golf courses," said Roberts from the company's Phoenix office at Tatum Ranch.

The purchase of Superstition Springs GC in Mesa, inset, brings AGC's Ariz. holdings to 10. The company also bought Tatum Ranch, above, in Cave Creek in another recent transaction.

Superstition Springs is an 18-hole resort course. According to General Manager Jeff Lessig, the purchase included the par-72, 7,000-yard golf course, clubhouse and practice facilities from Phoenix-based DMB Associates.

The Tatum Ranch purchase includes the par-72, 6,780-yard resort course, clubhouse and existing practice facilities. It will be one of the key Arizona operations centers of AGC and headed by Gary Klein, regional director for Arizona and Nevada. Klein, a 25-year veteran of the golf industry who has been with American Golf since 1975, comes to Phoenix from the Sahara Country Club in Las Vegas.

The Legend Golf Resort is located in the master-planned community of Arrowhead Ranch in Glendale.

Mich. designer awarded $2.45 million in Alaskan contract suit

By PETER BLAIS

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — A jury awarded architect William Newcomb $2.45 million in a breach of contract against the operator of the Anchorage Golf Course.

The course manager, Boyne (Mich.) USA subsidiary The Golf Co., claims the jury misread the evidence and is asking the state Superior Court judge to set aside the verdict.

Newcomb and The Golf Co. formed a partnership in 1984 to construct the course on municipal land with the intention of eventually selling it back to the city, the architect said. It opened in 1987.

"In today's market, that type of arrangement is not unusual," Newcomb said. "Limited funds are available for new construction. Boyne was a good partner the first three years. Then we saw things differently."

The Ann Arbor, Mich.-based architect filed suit last year saying he was unable to exercise his option to buy The Golf Co.'s interest in the project because it was mismanaged. Lack of maintenance made it impossible to attract investors, he claimed. He predicted he will eventually end up with control of the club.

"We figured to have the course three to four years then sell it back to the community," Newcomb said. "I fought with Boyne for four years. Now we'll have to put a lot more money back into it."

The Golf Co. countered that Newcomb was unable to find investors at the inflated price he was asking and that the company did a good job maintaining and improving the course.

Newcomb's faulty design and construc-

Is there life after the RTC?

By HAL PHILLIPS

Ever wonder what happens to financially trouble golf courses — usually real-estate based — that wind up in the hands of lenders, bankruptcy courts or the dreaded Resolution Trust Corporation?

Eventually, these developments are placed at public auctions, like the one recently conducted by Chicago-based NRC Auction, Inc. The Harbor Club, a resort located on Georgia's Lake Oconee, sold for $3.25 million at an auction conducted by NRC in November.

Pioneer Group, Inc., a real estate investment company based in Bristol, Va., purchased the golf course, equestrian center and 300 acres of undeveloped land at the Atlanta auction, which was ordered by bankruptcy court. Pioneer is affiliated
