Course photography adds to image, bottom line

By MARK LESLIE

A picture says a thousand words — and can sell hundreds of golf club memberships or thousands of golf rounds, for that matter. So, taking the best photograph at the best time takes on crucial dimensions, say world-known photographers Mike Klemme and Tony Roberts.

"The power of the picture" can make or break a golf course, said Klemme, whose Golfoto, Inc. is located in Enid, Okla.

When Interfive Co. Ltd. of Nagoya, Japan, hired Klemme to photograph its World Woods Golf Course in Florida, Interfive paid his fee for two days but reaped many times that amount in free advertising.

"We got photos in 25 different magazines. Six calendar companies ran photos. And it didn't cost [Interfive] a dollar," Klemme said. "We kind of turn into a marketing partner."

"I can oftentimes make a marginal-looking place look good," Roberts said. "Sometimes there's not one good hole to photograph. Then you have to pull a rabbit out of the hat."

Real or conjured, photos are necessary for many areas at a golf course: on scorecards, in yardage books, marketing materials, advertisements, and elsewhere.

The Trophy Club in Houston, one of the new Cobblestone additions.

Cobblestone making strides in Sun Belt

"We like to think of ourselves as getting a Mulligan in this business. Because of the experiences we've all had, we get to throw out the bad and keep the good.'

That's how Cobblestone Golf Group President James 'Bob' Husband, explains the success of the 18-monthold company founded by he and financial partner Brentwood Associ-

Since October 1992, Cobblestone has purchased or leased 10 Sunbelt courses. The most recent was February's acquisition of Pecan Grove Plantation Country Club, a private facility that marked the San Diegobased firm's entry into the Houston market. Plans are to add approximately five clubs a year in the foreseeable future.

Toward that end, Husband has assembled an experienced management team. Husband is a 20-year golf industry veteran and former chairman of chief operating officer of GolfCorp, ClubCorp International's public golf subsidiary.

He oversees an executive staff that includes Vice President of Operations Gary Dee, former head of operations for the PGA Tour; Vice President of Golf Operations Robert West, a former golf course owner and director of golf at Walt Disney World in Orlando, Fla.; Vice President of American Links, with you every step of the way

By PETER BLAIS

SAN ANTONIO, Texas — Four partners with extensive experience as owners, lenders, course designers and contractors have formed a company that can guide a course developer from initial planning through actual opening and operation of a golf facility.

"We impart to any project the unique ability to incorporate all these perspectives in our service to our clients," said American Links Consulting (ALC) President

"This combination of experience enables us to guide a client from the initial concept to a fully operational facility. Our services will include assistance in developing a concept, determining objectives, selecting the right designer and planning well-functioning facilities.

"Not only can we provide construction management during the project, we can also extend our services to implementing programs for the operation phase and longterm management of the facility."

While many management companies claim to offer developers similar conceptto-operation services, Trull said many are simply too small in scope and too inexperienced to be truly effective.

"I felt a need for a company that could offer a wider range of services while still providing detailed, efficient management," Irull said. "I believe we've put the right team together to do just that."

The team includes:

 Trull, President/General Manager — Trull spent the last 10 years with Wadsworth Golf Construction Co., starting as a shaper at Barton Creek Country Club in Austin, Texas, and working his way up to project superintendent. At Wadsworth, he was involved in more than 20 courses, nine of which appear in Golf Digest's most recent
