'Iron' men unite to broaden education, training

WESTON, Mass. — Golf course mechanics associations are materializing across the nation, as technicians organize themselves to meet the ever-increasing challenge of innovation. As equipment continues to change and improve, mechanics need to keep up.

Organizations now exist in New Jersey, Chicago, the Carolinas, the Mid-Atlantic region and New England, with two in Florida.

The benefits are wide ranging. The New Jersey Golf Course Mechanics

Association, for example, has compiled an equipment users list which details, by make and model, the equipment used at each member course. Should a mechanic run into a problem with repair, he or she can quickly locate someone with the same machine who may provide the insight needed to minimize down-time.

"It's sophisticated. The average auto mechanic can't work on this stuff," said Stephen Lucas, the mechanic at Weston Golf Club here and president of the Golf Course Mechanics Association, which is centered in New England states but holds national aspirations.

"Considering the heights of cut we're working with, it's very precise work. You're doing irrigation, sign-making, repair, setting up job assignments. The mechanic is a unique individual.

"I would like to get together with as many [regional mechanic] associations as I can, so we can talk about eventually taking this thing nationwide. That's my dream."

Any hopes that the Golf Course Superintendents Association of America (GCSAA) would adopt a "big-tent" attitude towards course mechanics died

Hiers exports pro-golf message to the masses

By MARK LESLIE

NAPLES, Fla. — Collier's Reserve Country Club superintendent Tim Hiers, who has delivered the message that golf courses are ecology-friendly to those inside and outside the golf industry, has been presented the first John James Audubon Steward Award.

"Tim is the perfect example of one of those people who was already moving in the right direction" when his club joined the New York Audubon Society's Cooperative Sanctuary Program for Golf Courses, said John Santacrose, NYAS executive director. "And he's running with the new information we've given him. Hopefully, that will happen with more people."

Presenting the award, NYAS President Ron Dodson said Hiers led the Collier's Reserve course through the rigorous Signature Program process and the facility has become the international model for others to follow. The award, established earlier this year, represents "the highest recognition of leadership in the field of environmental responsibility."

Santacrose said Hiers' involvement in the Signature Program was "like a springboard for him."

Among his new procedures were hiring an Integrated Pest Management specialist, and involving the general public, to the extent that a number of people have helped revegetation projects at neighboring golf courses.

"Tim got a lot of people in Naples, Colliers County and all of Florida involved in the program, has done programs for school-children and things like that," Santacrose said.

Dodson also cited the family-owned Collier Enterprises, the developer of Collier's Reserve, for its "commitment to environmental excellence."

Surprised by the award because he knows "a lot of others who are just as deserving," Hiers said: "I'm glad they have awards like this because superintendents don't get recognized for what they do. It's amazing. You have people in other organizations that don't do nearly as much and, yet, get huge recognition. Meanwhile,

Devotion to wildlife, golf moves Miller's muni to the forefront

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Here is a man who loves wildlife and golf courses. Most of all, he loves wildlife on golf courses. Hence, John Miller, the city's golf course superintendent, has earned recognition as one of the first Environmental Steward Award winners by gaining full certification for one of his three municipal golf courses in the Audubon Cooperative Sanctuary Program for Golf Courses (ACSP).

"I don't think there's anything more beautiful than a golf course early in the morning when the sun's first coming up," Miller said. "The only thing more beautiful is if there's a bunch

Delhi dedicates new education center

DELHI, N.Y. — More than 100 representatives of the turf industry joined faculty and staff from the State University College of Technology at Delhi, Aug. 16, to dedicate the college's new Turf Education Center here.

The building, which opened to students Aug. 29, is an example of the industry investing in its future, according to Mary Ellen Duncan, Delhi College president. More than $85,000 toward the $320,000 educational center was provided through donations from the industry.

Lead gifts included $33,000 from the New York State Turfgrass Association and $25,000 from Ransomes America Corp. Also contributing were the Central New York, Finger Lake, Hudson Valley, Long Island, Metropolitan and Northeastern golf course superintendents associations.

The remaining construction costs were paid by the College Association at Delhi Inc., the not-for-profit auxiliary services corporation that owns and operates the Delhi College Golf Course.

The building illustrates how the college can be entrepreneurial in developing needed academic facilities, Duncan said. "State funds were not available for this project so we turned to other sources and they responded enthusiastically," she said. "We also believe that the strong industry support this project generated is indicative of the high regard Delhi College has earned throughout the turf profession."
