Maryland family battles elements, government to keep course going

By PETER BLAIS

The Shields family has been in the Maryland golf business for 55 years. Family members have seen their courses wither in the heat, drown under heavy rains, become overgrown when fathers and brothers were away at war and unable to care for them.

Despite the worst Mother Nature and foreign dictators could throw at them, the Shields always brought their courses back into play. But John Shields isn't sure whether his family and other private course operators can overcome their newest adversary, the government.

Short on funds and long on hope that golf is the answer to their financial woes, local and state governments have become major golf course developers. With free land, no taxes, and the ability to subsidize operations that fall below projections, government-owned facilities start with a tremendous advantage over private course operators like the Shields, owners of Glenn Dale (Md.) Golf Club and Twin Shields Golf Course in nearby Dunkirk.

"It's welfare golf and it makes it very hard on the private sector," Shields said. "With all the munis coming on line, we [United States] could end up with more courses than we need and private, daily-fee operators could get squeezed out. The only choice our family may eventually have is to turn our land into house lots."

That prospect unnerves Shields, whose father, Ray, and uncle, Roy, moved from Ohio to Maryland in the mid-1930s. The twin brothers worked at East Potomac

Park for the Loeffler family, operators of East Potomac and other courses, including Annapolis Country Club.

Ray and Roy bought the Annapolis club in 1941, but were shortly thereafter called into the service in World War II. With no one available to maintain Annapolis Roads, weeds and small saplings took over. When the hostilities ended, the two returned and began the work of reclaiming the neglected facility. Older brother Bob (who later became head superintendent at nearby Woodmont Country Club in Rockville) helped restore the course.

The Shields sold Annapolis CC in 1958, but not before a brief, four-year fling operating White Flint Golf Club from 1950-54 and acquiring the property to build Glenn Dale Golf Club in 1957. Ray and Roy later designed and built Twin Shields Golf Club in Dunkirk, which opened in 1969.

Ray died in 1980 and John, a graduate of the University of Maryland's associate turfgrass program, returned home to help his mother, Hinky Shields, manage Glenn Dale. Ray's surviving brother, Roy, took over full-time operation of Twin Shields, leaving Glenn Dale to John and his family. John, brother Jeff and sister Pam Jasper bought Glenn Dale from their mother in 1984. (Roy, 80, his daughter Karen and head pro of 20 years John Dodson operate Twin Shields.)

Glenn Dale underwent some major changes beginning in 1984. The family redesigned the course and reconstructed all the tees. They planted 1,000 additional

In addition to expanding the opportunities for Californians of all levels and backgrounds to learn and play the great game of golf."

Price's outstanding service and contributions to the game began nearly 30 years

MARKETING IDEA OF THE MONTH

Marketing on the 'Net' wave of golf's future

By DEBORAH SANDERS

As a course owner or general manager, you market your course locally and perhaps in national periodicals. But how about marketing in the newest forum, the Internet?

The World Wide Web with its nicely formatted text and its pictures, and often its sound and video clips — and almost always its hypertext links that allow the user to go from the Web site to an E-mail address or to another Web site — are highly attractive features that draw users. That last feature — the immediate transportation to your E-mail address — is probably the most important aspect of marketing on the Web. If you're piggybacking on the Web site of another golfing entity, it enables potential customers to reach you directly and immediately.

You may want to build your own Web page, for an investment. You may want to find your own designer, or you may want to use DesignSite (tm) LLC, which has put together sites for a recording studio, an industrial equipment company, and many law firms.
