

Galyean: Dr. Spa

or Sausalito or some other sexy place. A lot of this has to do with electronics, faxes, FedEx packages, modems. It doesn't matter where you are if you have the reputation to produce."

Galyean left the big-city architecture and design world in the mid-1980s to become a freelance design consultant. A graduate of the Pratt Institute, he also serves as a thesis advisor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and lectures on resort master planning at Harvard University's Graduate School of Design. Galyean said the resort work fits his personality and standards.

"Number one, the client understands that good design is essential to their success," he said. "There is, going in, a value placed by the owner and management on good design and there aren't a whole lot of building types that you can say that about.

"Two, the success is immediately readable. There's so much about this that's like theater. You're creating an environment for people to have a three or four-day experience. It's got a bit of fantasy about it. It's about making people happy, romantic, calm. It's a mission. You open the doors to a place and the guests comment in the first 48 hours like theater critics. I like that.

"The work is challenging. There's always disruptions, weather issues, seasonal issues — I like that, too. The need to integrate all these different disciplines in a symphonic way is essential to success. But it's not as if I'm the only one. I work with teams of great, talented people — hundreds of them."

be an elegant and visually distinctive facility which combines in one building a clubhouse, built-in exterior sponsor display booths, permanent grandstand seating for up to 12,000 spectators and a limited number of Stadium Suites. Combined with spectator flow around the base of the structure [below the front of the grandstand], upward of 25,000 spectators will witness the final four holes of each round."

In addition to the three courses, the golf complex will include a hotel/resort featuring a major national hotel with corporate meeting facilities and several hundred golf cottages.
