

Morrish, Druzisky team in the desert

HENDERSON, Nev. — MacDonald Ranch Country Club, a planned community nestled along the McCollough Mountain Range here, will offer an 18-hole private golf course designed by Jay Morrish and David Druzisky. The designers said no other course like this will exist in Las Vegas due to the course's soil, terrain, colors of rock and its location.

Natural beauty will encompass the golfers, allowing them to enjoy the sport while being surrounded by desert and water features, according to Emily Sherwood, vice president of sales and marketing for MacDonald Ranch Country Club.

An elaborate water feature on the course comprises several streams meandering downward along the fairways, forming several waterfalls that flow into a two-acre lake. The water feature interacts with the 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th fairways and, in keeping with the developers' desire for water conservation, will continually re-circulate.

The MacDonald Ranch Country Club entry and golf course are shown in this aerial shot. The course is expected to be completed this spring.

Jacobson proves that you can go back home

GLENVIEW, Ill. — Native son Rick Jacobson has built his reputation as a golf course architect by designing layouts in New York, Virginia, Delaware, Wisconsin, Iowa and Japan. Now, Jacobson is getting the opportunity to show his creativity in this north Chicago suburb where he grew up.

The Glenview Park District has awarded Jacobson the job of designing the new "family-oriented" nine-hole course planned for the Glenview Naval Air Station Redevelopment Project.

The course will be built on 39 acres as part of a mixed-use redevelopment of the 1,121-acre parcel that formerly served as a U.S. Naval Air base. It will be located adjacent to a new 18-hole championship course being designed by Tom Fazio.

"I am honored to have been chosen to contribute to Glenview's 'once-in-a-lifetime' opportunity to redevelop the Glenview Naval Air Station property," said Jacobson, a 1976 graduate of Maine North High School. "As someone who spent his formative years in Glenview, I know what a tremendous community it is. I am thankful for this opportunity to give something back to the village and I am committed to creating the best possible nine-hole golf course for the residents."

The course will be aimed at the segment of the golfing population that may not have the time, expertise or inclination to play the championship course. Beginning golfers, juniors and seniors are expected to comprise the bulk of its customers.

"The synergy of the nine-hole and 18-hole courses — along with the Park District's existing par-70 18-hole course — will offer golfers of all levels the opportunity to play golf right in the village," Jacobson noted. A tunnel under West Lake Avenue will connect the Jacobson course with the Fazio course.
