NEW BEER DISPENSING SYSTEM ELIMINATES WASTE

Newark, N. J.—Economy, convenience and a properly palatable drink are outstanding claims made for a new beer dispensing system made by the Kristal Engineering Co., 30 Nicholson street, under the name of the Kristal-Vac dispensing system. Designed by skilled engineers as a perfectly co-ordinated unit rather than an assembly of various stock parts, the new beer dispensing system eliminates "wild" beer waste, thereby making for economy, while at the same time maintaining uniform temperature and quality in the dispensed beer.

Combining the tank cooling and coil features with the Kristal-Vac trap for the elimination of "wildness" and the delivery of uniformly gasified beer, for which patent application papers are being prepared; the new dispensing system permits of tapping a fresh keg with little or no waste, as well as the delivery of salable beer immediately upon tapping.

An automatic air pump supplies pressure at any predetermined poundage. The beer passes from the keg through the cooling system in a straight line to the vacuum tank where the "wildness" is taken out of it, while any sediment present is eliminated. From the vacuum tank the beer passes to the cooling tank where it is pre-cooled to within 5 degrees of the desired temperature. From the cooling tank it passes through a short coil where it receives its final cooling immediately before delivery to glass or pitcher.

In actual practice 20 glasses of beer between 40 to 45 degrees F. have been delivered per minute without any variation in quality.
