

a person's ability to put him in charge of a club department, that should be evidence enough of his ability to make minor decisions for himself.

By a system of checking all purchases and the money spent for supplies, equipment and labor by the person in charge, any discrepancies can soon be discovered. It does not necessitate any elaborate cost system for the one in charge to keep an accurate record of all invoices for supplies, etc., and charging them to the proper account. At the end of the month these records can be turned over to the secretary of the club along with regular weekly or monthly records of cash received from meals, green-fees, etc., for checking and payment.

Let us emphasize again, we have no ax to grind with club officials or committees, but do think that in a great many cases they have reduced their department head's efficiency by over-ruling them in a number of minor matters.

Fortunately and indeed pleasing to myself and Mrs. Meyer, our own committees and club officials are very considerate and seldom worry themselves or ourselves by going over our heads, or interfering with our judgment in matters pertaining to club operations.

While we have made some mistakes in the past year, our club ended up the year 1933 with a small profit for the year's operation, which indicates we must be about right in most matters. This profit was made in spite of the fact that while our membership roster was about the same as in better years, our yearly dues were cut 30 per cent and service and maintenance standards were higher. The concessions at the club (which are given entirely to us) showed a slight profit, not enough to allow us to winter in Florida, but we came through the winter eating regularly and emerged fat and sassy for the coming season.

1935 Ryder Cup Matches Awarded Ridgewood (N. J.) C. C.

AT A MEETING held in mid-July, the Ryder Cup committee of the PGA, consisting of J. B. Mackie, Leo Diegel, Tom Boyd, Jack Pirie and Doc Tracy, selected the course of the Ridgewood (N. J.) CC as the venue for the 1935 Ryder Cup matches.

The selection is a wise one on at least two counts. In the first place, New Jersey has not had a tournament of major importance since 1915, although one of the finest golfing states in the Union. By locating the Ryder Cup encounter in this long neglected area, there is a fine chance that galleries for the matches will be ample, particularly since Ridgewood is only commuting distance from the other clubs of the New York metropolitan district.

Also by awarding the event to Ridgewood, the PGA pays subtle tribute to the conscientious way in which George Jacobus has handled the presidency of the association in recent years. Ridgewood is George's home club.

Sod Webworm Woeful Subject at Iowa Meeting

JULY MEETING of the Iowa Greenkeepers association was held Tuesday July 10 at the Cedar Rapids (Ia.) C. C. More than 35 greenkeepers turned out in spite of the fact that sod webworms are keeping most of the boys busy. The main topic of the day was a discussion of various remedies and their effectiveness for this pest. Kerosene emulsion seems to be the most effective and inexpensive remedy, but there is considerable labor and expense involved in making and applying it. Opinions regarding the value of lead arsenate and the pyrethrum spray treatments vary greatly. The present infestation of sod webworms is one of the heaviest Iowa greenkeepers have had for many years and is quite general over the southern part of the state.

Joe Benson, pro-greenkeeper of the Cedar Rapids club, was a fine host and put on one of the most interesting meetings of the season. The course is located on the edge of an exclusive residential section of the city and is outstanding for the beauty of its scenery, trees and water hazards. The clubhouse is one to be proud of, and the club has a fine modern outdoor swimming pool. Joe has made a long study of turf culture and his club has profited greatly by his skill and knowledge.
