

Jock Anderson, pro at Techny Fields fee course (Chicago distr.) has Helen Hicks as guest star for his Saturday morning free class of New Trier high school girl students. The classes were started by Anderson and the smart young lady who has charge of girl's athletics at New Trier. They run from 45 to 70 pupils every Saturday morning through May, June and September. It is estimated that 200 of the school's girl pupils have attended these classes.

prospects on the same road as the golf course. Incidentally these two play in the low eighties and high seventies. Dad was the inspirational spark plug and did much of the "dirty" work in building the course. He still takes time to handle ably the multitudinous tasks of green-chairman.

Players are about alike wherever you find them. Here we have those air-tight matches where a man with asthma would not be tolerated in the gallery and then there are those where extreme razzing only omitting tripping, is permitted.

Some of the boys decided last year that razzing should be dispensed with in one operation so a "costume woof" tournament was arranged. It brought out some unique creations. Costumes from Henry the Eighth to Mahatma Ghandi stalked the greens that day. There was even a gallant golfer in a sulky with a caddie assuming the role of horse. During the play there was noise equal to the county fair with horns, tick-tacks, squawkers and cap pistols contributing to the din. It was hoped that this outburst would result in a turn to perfect golf etiquette, the rules of which appear on the back of one's score card. The party itself was a huge success but the objective only partially realized.

Our club also has the same percentage of players who can nonchalantly kick the ball into a better lie, cough while an opponent is putting, blame every one that fails to drop on some weed the greenkeeper missed, or in a fit of displeasure wrap a six dollar driver around a tree when the ball sails out of bounds. But it is as congenial, as lacking in dullness and as thoroughly sold on golf as you will find in these forty-eight states. Once a week or almost as frequently there will be an informal "eat together" party on that little porch. When the sun goes down the coal oil lamp is lighted because the utilities haven't gotten out that way yet. So when

Illinois Pros Leading in Free Kid Lessons

CLASS instruction of youngsters gets a boost with the tie-up between the Illinois PGA and the Chicago Park district. After the Chicago Tribune-Daily Fee public golf school concludes, pros of the Chicago district are to give free group lessons to kids at six spots in the Chicago Park system. Boys and girls under 17 are eligible.

Midwestern pros are going strong for this kid instruction business. Harry Cooper has been giving free group lessons at the Glenbard high school and coached its golf team to victory in its season's schedule with other schools in its territory.

Jock Anderson, pro at Techny Fields fee course, has been teaching free a class of from 40 to 60 girls from New Trier High School Saturday mornings. Helen Hicks was Jock's guest co-teacher one Saturday recently.

When you see how these kids are coming out for pros' free class lessons you become confident about the future of golf.

What the pros all over the country are doing in this market development among kids is something that manufacturers must bear in mind when they rate the importance and value of pro trade and then determine what discounts are to be allowed the various classes of golf retail outlets. This market development among women and children through the free group lessons given by pros is doing a lot to balance any beefs manufacturers may have about pro credit in spots.
