DEVELOPING FINE TURF

Common chickweed is becoming a serious pest on watered fairways in the North. One spraying with 2,4-D checks but does not kill it. Repeated treatment with 2,4-D is dangerous where there is any amount of bent grass in the fairways. The bent will be seriously damaged. Some clubs have had excellent results by using sodium arsenite in October and November. The chickweed is one of the last plants to stop growth in the fall. Two or three treatments of sodium arsenite, spaced a week or two apart can be made and will not be noticed because the grass has started to turn brown by that time.

Soil Compaction and Matted Turf

The turf on approaches should be better, or at least as good as on any other part of the fairway. Many approaches have the poorest coverage and are mainly clover and knotweed after early summer. Wear from concentrated traffic by players and tractor drawn equipment, along with associated
