

UPJOHN REDUCES PRICE OF ACTI-DIONE FERRATED

Growing demand for Acti-dione Ferrated turf disease control material has enabled the makers, The Upjohn Co., Kalamazoo, Mich., to reduce prices substantially. Results of Acti-dione Ferrated treatment in control of melting out, fading out, dollar spot and other fungus diseases account for the increase in sales.

Upjohn research is being extended in two new directions, one of which is of particular interest to course supts., although the other activity, that of Upjohn salesmen sending to the company's Antibiotic Research Group samples of common dirt from salesmen's territory may involve superintendents' cooperation. That work is for the purpose of searching for soil micro-organisms capable of producing an antibiotic or antiviral agent.

The other Upjohn research work directly connected with course maintenance is a fungus disease identification service.

Harold J. Maloney, chemical sales dept., The Upjohn Co., advises the following procedure is to be followed by superintendents who want identification of fungus on diseased turf grasses in order to determine what treatment is required:

Cut out turf plug about cup size with part of diseased area and part of good area on the same plug. Or, one diseased plug

PRE-FAB DURABLE SHELTERS INTRODUCED AT OAKMONT

During the 1953 National Open at Oakmont galleries saw and used the first pre-fabricated pressure-treated shelter houses for golf courses and parks. The shelters were designed and engineered by the Wood Preserving Div. of Koppers Co., Inc., after Oakmont's Grounds committee had discussed the problem with Oakmont member Harry R. Condon, a Koppers Co. executive.

Architects and engineers Condon got assigned to the job consulted course superintendents, park operating authorities and Green-chairmen and came up with a 12 ft. by 12 ft. shelter of mixed oak.

Cut-to-size pieces were pressure-treated at the Koppers plant at Orrville, O., for protection against weather, termites and fungus.

Based on experience with railroad and other utility work the Koppers engineers estimate the new pre-fab shelters will last 30 years with minimum of repairs. The five Oakmont shelters were erected by the grounds force in slightly more than four days.

The buildings have a slightly brownish color of natural, unpainted wood.

Appearance, utility and long life of the buildings, together with low erection cost and over-all economy registered so strongly with Oakmont officials other pre-fab buildings of pressure-treated timber are being considered for the course.

Inquiries of visiting club and park officials and superintendents were so numerous at Oakmont, the Koppers Co. decided to get into the field nationally.

Details of the new shelters and information concerning other course and park buildings of the general character of the Oakmont pre-fabs may be secured from Wood Preserving Div., Koppers Co., Inc., Pittsburgh 19, Pa.
