ting local publicity for tournaments and extracurricular events staged at Roanoke.

One of Maples' better known members is Davey Crocket (no kin of the original), who has been the subject of newspaper and magazine pieces on the strength of an unusual round he played this spring at Roanoke. He shot the nine holes in a regulation 35 although he parred only one hole. Davey, 66-years-old and a daily golfer who plays in the 70s, did it by shooting four birdies and as many bogeys. Crockett is also well known in Southern Seniors competition, having distinguished himself in recent years in several tournaments for the golfing elders.

Maple's cousin, Nancy, is another who has established a solid reputation as a golfer in the Carolinas. Just last May she reached the high mark in her career by finishing as low amateur in the Peach Blossom Open at Spartanburg, S. C.

carpenter dropped in and watched Bob make wood heads.

White says the carpenter gazed at him sawing and filing and sweating like a pony and eventually remarked:

"I always thought the Scotch were smart but they must be damn fools."

"Why?" asked the perspiring White.

"Because there's a shoe last factory at Lynn where I do some work that could do that wood job in two or three minutes. I'll show you. I may spoil one or two of your blocks but I'll show you how to beat this job you're doing," said the carpenter.

"And he did turn out some beautiful heads," Bob adds.

When White went to Cincinnati, then to Louisville and Chicago, he learned about the Dayton (O.) Last Works and had this company make heads for him and other professionals. That business eventually developed into the Crawford, McGregor and Canby golf playing equipment manufacturing concern, the predecessor of the MacGregor Golf Co.
