Washington Physicist Invents Strobe Golf Trainer

Prof. Luis W. Alvarez, Washington, D. C. physicist, has patented a stroboscopic golf training device. A stroboscope is an instrument for studying interrupted light. In Alvarez' device, bright flashes illuminate the clubhead at four or five points as it approaches and strikes the ball. In looking down at the ball the player sees a series of "positionally arrested images" at these points. The images tell the player whether he has the club face at the proper angle. By repeating his swing, he may be able to correct tendencies to slice, hook or top the ball. A ball may or may not be used with the strobe trainer.

Also attached to the trainer is a timing device that measures speed of the swing and indicates the distance an imaginary ball would travel.
