Says Golfers Should Protect Selves Against Theft, Liability

Writing in the Long Island Press, John M. Brennan, the paper's golf writer, said that he had recently queried Timothy W. Foley, a golf insurance specialist, as to liability in the case of thefts of equipments and golf course accidents. It is Foley's opinion that neither the club nor the pro can be held responsible when clubs, bags, apparel, etc. are stolen from a club storage area. It is the responsibility of the golfer to protect himself against pilferage of this kind. Coverage of this type often can be obtained through a rider to a comprehensive dwelling policy.

Foley, Brennan says, feels that no player, whether on a public or private course, should venture to hit a golf ball without being covered by liability insurance. Protection of this kind can be obtained for a nominal premium through an insurance agent or broker.
