torney general in a dispute over the admittance of a Negro player, Charles Sifford. Due to the PGA's Caucasian clause, Sifford is not eligible for membership in the organization. As a consequence he would not be eligible to attempt to qualify for the Championship unless the professional organization's membership rules were to be changed between now and next summer. The Caucasian clause violates California law and rather than continue the dispute with the state, the PGA executive committee decided to pull the 1962 tournament out of California.

Late in June the PGA stated that it had not become involved with California's attorney general over the Caucasian clause and that the tournament was withdrawn from Los Angeles for other reasons.
