

for instance, was spent on the clubhouse. A less elaborate building would have been acceptable until more funds were available. The 19th hole, for example, hasn't been an overwhelming success because Neshobe members, perhaps recognizing that Vermont summers are short, have been more intent on playing golf than leaning on a bar. They have long winters in which to do that, anyway. Another mistake, which proved costly at first but has been corrected, was that the Neshobe members didn't set up a proper bookkeeping system. Money didn't exactly fly out the window, because there wasn't enough of it, but neither was it spent as judiciously as it may have been. About a year ago a new sec.-treas. was installed and order has been introduced to the ledger dept.

Not Enough Meetings

What may be called poor liaison also handicapped the club. The board of directors didn't meet often enough to thoroughly discuss all problems. Committee members weren't fully instructed as to what they could or couldn't do when placed in charge of a project and, as a result, either went too far or were criticized for not doing enough. Where professional help isn't running a club, says English, more attention should be paid to operating details than Neshobe's board was able to give them. But this, too, is being straightened out.

Generally, everyone connected with the club is satisfied with the way it has been run so far in spite of the shortcomings mentioned above. Undoubtedly, 1962 will see most of the rough edges completely smoothed out and then all of the members will be able to devote more time to what was originally intended — playing golf.
