Trans-Miss Has Scholarship Fund for Agronomy Majors

For the past several years the Trans-Mississippi Golf Assn. has been sponsoring a program that helps aspiring supts. to obtain an education. Youngsters who major in agronomy and take turf science and soil analysis as a specialty while in college have a chance to qualify for scholarships amounting to $200 per semester that the Trans-Miss organization provides.

Selection of the boys is made by faculty committees that base their choices on academic interest and scholastic records. At the present time, 16 boys are receiving grants from the association and more are expected to benefit in the future.

Senior members of the association have been the major contributors to the scholarship fund. The association also helps the students locate jobs, but demand for qualified young agronomy majors is so great that this doesn't pose much of a problem. Assisting in the placement of the youngsters and serving as an adviser to the Trans-Miss in the program is Marvin H. Ferguson, research coordinator for the USGA.

Change Rutgers Turf Dates

Due to a conflict in schedules it has been necessary for the Rutgers University agricultural experiment station to push its turf field days ahead one day. The program will be held on Aug. 7-8 rather than Aug. 8-9, as previously announced.
