Evidence of Well Planned Destruction at Agawam

Damage inflicted on greens at Agawam Hunt in East Providence, R. I., this summer wasn't just the work of hit and run vandals. Charles W. Parker, supt. at the club, is convinced that a well planned foray was carried out. In the top photo, the flagpole was hacked in two, something that Parker says never was done before. In the past, poles were split lengthwise, which is somewhat easier to do than cutting them in two. The Agawam greenmaster estimates that it took at least five minutes to commit this depredation.

In the bottom photo, a hole-cutter was not used to gouge turf out of the green, although it appears that it was. Parker reasons that the vandals looked around until they found a tin can with the exact diameter of a hole cutter and then used it in slicing up this putting surface.

Course vandalism has been so widespread throughout New England this year that the GCSA section there has requested its members to keep a detailed record of destruction caused by trespassers. The organization plans to use this information in trying to get the various state legislatures to pass bills that will lead to "fines and punishment" for persons convicted of destroying golf course property.

The USGA reports that vandalism probably is on the upswing. East Lake in Atlanta, it reports, spent nearly $1,000 this year in replacing markers, flagsticks, hoses, benches, etc. that were stolen. Theft and destruction, it is estimated, cost clubs hundreds of thousands of dollars every year. It can't be completely charged against juveniles either. One adult removed approximately 1,000 feet of grass from a green and replanted it on his property.

Vandalism has been so widespread in the Midwest this year that the Chicago District GA has engaged a safety and security expert to survey many of its clubs and suggest methods for preventing destruction of their property.

Budget Preparation Shows Pro How to Make, Save Money

"The best thing that ever happened to me in the golf business was when our club elected a tough president who insisted that I carefully estimate before the annual meeting what I expected my income from the club would be the following year," a professional at a Midwestern private club recently told Golfdom.

The club had been losing money and the members were being assessed heavily every year. When the new president came in he required every committee chairman to prepare a budget of revenue and costs. There were numerous complaints. The house committee claimed it couldn't make reliable estimates because, for one thing, unpredictable weather controlled its expenses and income. Weather was the course and grounds committee's main excuse for not being able to prepare a budget. There also were other reasons, none of which stood up when the new president examined them.

"Uncertainty of the weather was one of
