New Miniature Camera for Shooting Tournaments

A remarkable new, light, compact, rugged, very flexible little television camera, which is portable is now being used to telecast tournaments. Since its use gives much versatility and is relatively inexpensive because heavy equipment can be eliminated, golfing enthusiasts look forward now to more telecasting of local events.

Actually, the camera seen depicted here in actual use at the 1963 Seattle Open tournament was originally designed for closed circuit TV work, but it works remarkably well on a course.

The portable camera broadens the scope of programming and is used in areas where large and expensive studio equipment cannot be conveniently transported. A shoulder mount and a manually operated zoom lens with a through-the-lens eyepiece are special features. The control unit, sync generator and batteries are mounted on a golf cart, permitting maximum maneuverability.
